Excellent response. I would add that Fascism usually relies on two additional things to get and retain control: (1) A persecution myth. We -- pure and honest spirits -- are being persecuted by evil forces because they hate our purity and honesty and because they are greedy and evil and want to suppress all that is not evil and take everything from the good people. A corollary to this is that although we are good and compassionate we should repress our natural compasion and do everything we can to eradicate the evil. Note: this is what Glenn Beck was implying over the weekend and what the Teabaggers seem to be pissed-off about. (2) Outside forces are attempting to invade and crush us both from the outside and from fifth columnists inside. The State must protect the good people from the threats outside and inside the country. Hitler, Stalin, Mao and every other nutcase dictator who has run a country uses this ruse. Bush used it to good effect as well in justifying the Iraq war. Condi Rice played Goebbles to Bush's dime-store Hitler. Unfortunately for the Pugs, the notion of perpetual warfare in terms of the GWAT didn't catch fire.

I don't subscribe to your religion. There's nothing inherently wrong

Education (for critical thinking skills) and information (to apply said skills) are not available to all, contrary to the founders' vision.

Yes, I got that one from Radio New Zealand, sort of cute, had full data (sans an original written ink signature) and a cartoon of a kiwi on it - I found it satisfactory. I have gotten only two other "veries" from other stations by e-mail, and neither one was complete, but what can you do? I think at least one of those was from a person who really did not understand the concept of QSLing, since the e-mail was really a "Thank You for listening and please tune in again" kind of thing.

There are some who are eager to post a nice full-data QSL for even a quickie e-mail - DW, CRI, RN, VoR, Radio Prague all seem highly cooperative in this regard. So far, I have gotten nada from VOA, Radio Australia, RHC or several others, which surprise me somewhat. Had V. Vietnam read my complete letter on the air one night a few months back, but have yet to receive a promised QSL. I am patient, though...

I certainly understand Steve's aversion to the e-mail return method - the farther one gets from the traditional format, the more chance for having it questioned at some point. Not that, as a hobby, this is a do-or-die thing - but there is a certain amount of honor and satisfaction in having the tangible evidence of the accomplishment in hand, and that's worth something. It would be frustrating to know that you have bagged a station, received confirmation, and yet have it questioned because of a technicality.

I don't worry about technicalities per se, but it is certainly more satisfying to get at least a prepared card back signed and stamped from the station at least with a nifty envelope with cool stamps on it.

I guess over the past 40 + years that the hobby has changed.

Stations come, stations go, but I guess the main thing is to remain patient, and keep trying.

Here are some quotes from "The Shadow of Zog" by Israel Shamir:

Jeff Blankfort writes, "Ardently pro-Israel American Jews are in positions of unprecedented influence within the United States and have assumed or been given decision making positions over virtually every segment of our culture and body politic". And he quotes Benjamin Ginsberg's "The Fatal Embrace: Jews and the State":

"Jews played a central role in American finance during the 1980s, and they were among the chief beneficiaries of that decade's corporate mergers and reorganizations. Today, though barely 2 % of the nation's population is Jewish, close to half its billionaires are Jews. The chief executive officers of the three major television networks and the four largest film studios are Jews, as are the owners of the nation's largest newspaper chain and the most influential single newspaper, the New York Times".

Is it a conspiracy of Jews to steal the Republic? No, no conspiracy is necessary. In Jules Verne's juvenile novel, Children of Captain Grant, a villain leads the captain's ship astray by placing a magnet brick beneath the compass. The magnet does not conspire: it constrains the compass. The sheer mass of self-involved Jews in the media acts in a similar way and draws the superpower off its normal course. For the media is the nerve system of a modern state. Modern democracy in practice in a very complicated society can be compared to a sophisticated computer. Its machinery can function successfully on one condition: there is a free flow of information across the system. While every input is instinctively checked and sieved on one criterion, whether it is good for Jews..

Thus, concentration of Jews in the media created the distortion. A takeover of every other part of industry or trade would be noticed and reported in the media; but there is no remedy for media takeover...

Gandhi could be condemned as 'racist', for he 'noticed' the privileged position of the British in India. By PC logic, a good American should reply to Mahatma: yes, there are some rich and powerful Brits in India, but there are also poor Tommy Atkinses, governesses, honest administrators, writers like Kipling and Orwell. On the other hand, there are powerful and rich Rajas, important Brahmins. How do you dare, sir, to demand 'de-colonisation'! This is sheer anti-English racism!

An old Indian Air Force officer Joe Thomas actually reminded that, "while the population of the US today is approximately the same as the population of India a century ago, the British in India never numbered more than 50,000 and still ruled India. They did not rule India by force but by dominating Indian discourse. Indians fought for the British and put down rebellions. During the two world wars, millions of Indians fought as volunteers for Britain. If such a tiny group could control India, then it is not strange that 100 times that number can influence the United States"...

Jews say that being "anti-Semitic" is a terrible crime. Do they say being "anti-Arab" is a terrible crime? What about "anti-Christian", or "anti-German"? Of course the Jews think they are special. Any other group could be our enemy, but not the Jews, they say. The Jews tell us the Arabs are our enemies. The Jewish controlled media tells us that the Jews are America's only friend in the Middle East. The truth is that before these Jews America didn't have any enemies in the Middle East.

No one is moaning because America once fought the British. But suddenly Jews can not be the enemy under any circumstances. Why is that? Because the Jews control the media. Think outside the box.

Now that America is ruled by the Jews it is no insult to be called "anti-Semite". The insult is that they think we care about their self serving verbiage.

The Jewish controlled media said the French were "cheese eating surrender monkeys". Why can't the French howl "anti-French" like the Jews howl "anti-Semite"? Because the French don't control the media, Jews do.

This is what President Nixon said:

http://www.hnn.us/comments/15664.html

"There may be some truth in that if the Arabs have some complaints about my policy towards Israel, they have to realize that the Jews in the U.S. control the entire information and propaganda machine, the large newspapers, the motion pictures, radio and television, and the big companies. And there is a force that we have to take into consideration."

"Fascism now throws the noxious theories of so-called Liberalism upon the rubbish heap.
Fascism...does not hesitate to call itself illiberal and anti-liberal." - Benito Mussolini

In 1923 Mussolini was asked by an Italian encyclopedia person to define and explain the word "Fascism" for their new edition. He said the key concepts of fascism were overt nationalism, and repudiation of liberalism in all its forms.

You are definitely Gregg. So, you're now going under the screenname of Kop. Interesting. And the word is "proverbial," not "perverbial," you pervert.
I am a college professor. Even Lare knows that by insulting my school in virtually everyone one of his posts. And Gregg, you have consistently earned the title of "clown tard." Steve is just a bitter, old alcoholic that only gets respect for the one thing in his sad life - shortwave radio. Hell, I even respect him for that. But nobody, not even the trolls, respect you. You are the most pitiful of the pitiful.

I'd say get a life, but it's probably too late for you.

Hey, clown 'tard, the one thing that certainly comes out of your diatribe is your apparent hatred of the shortwave hobby.

Again. Name calling rather than addressing the discussion.

That would suggest not only a weak argument, but an inadequacy of weilding it.

That is assuming that you HAD an argument.

So far, you've only shown your bluster.

I have sat during this day and wondered what the fk is going on here.

The news earlier seemed to focus on some clown 'tard baseball player who may or may not have taken steroids.

And, Congress is threatening him with an apparent 30 years in prison.

Yet later, I hear of some sand niggers who were ALLOWED to board an aircraft and fly to the Netherlands with apparent impunity with a bunch of suspicious stuff.

What the fk is going on here?

And before anyone else goes off, if you disagree with my use of the n word, let me simply state that I, as a US citizen, will never, never, allow anyone to steal the use of a word from me.

If I hear it on the radio, or if I go into a shop and hear it blasted out, then I too, have the RIGHT to use the word.

Ya don't like it, then shove it up your ass!

I am addressing the discussion -- it's about your political pig-ignorance

I can understand how you'd want to pretend it's about something else,

The history is obscure, but no Aryan nation that was not also Christian ever had a "Jewish problem" or had the Jews start their wars and run their banking. Nietzsche picked up on this in the Genealogy of Morals.

It was the Aryan warrior elites, not the Jews that imposed Christianity.

Trajan didnt haul all the Jews to Rome, merely the aristocracy, leaving the serfs and slaves for new Roman masters. Who were replaced by Byzantines, then the Caliphs, the Ottomans, and the Brits, before the descendants of the original indigenous land owners returned.

As Native Americans how long indigenous tribal ownership rights last.
And consider that never, in the nearly 2000 years since Trajan as the indigenous population run the place, and we see they cant run what has been given over to their control now. They are ruled street thugs, and would be better off if the Jews took back control.

At the same time the few smart girls born to Palestinians figure out what life is like for women in the secular west, and therefore get the fuck out, as Ayaan Hirsi Ali has done, they keep breeding the airheads because their machismo is such they think the womb is just the room in which their seed grows.

And meanwhile, Jewesses, aware of the high rates of genetic disease among the Jews have looked it up to see Nordic Y Chromosome lines have the lowest rates and the most robust immune systems. So, they are going to fertility clinics, and there's an epidemic of towheads now in Israel.
The JEWs of all people, are engaging in EUGENICS!

The next generation will no doubt figure out what to do about all the Palestinian jackass Y chromosome lines. Those here dont have a future either.

Ya don't like it, then shove it up your ass!

You are full of shit.

Nah, she'd suck me off and swallow..!

Please, think before you post.

I'm waiting for Obama to start chucking spears and promising everyone their own hut and and a $12 stipend a year.

You'd be better off asking your relative Boy Barry that question:

Ask the boy whasup. president@whitehouse.gov

Extremely heavy emphasis on the BOY.

Damn, the Canucky Niggah didn't have a damn thing to say...

You dumb sand niggers (sorry, I categorize ya all this way) need to understand that you need to get your collective shit together...

Yet later, I hear of some sand niggers who were ALLOWED to board an aircraft and fly to the Netherlands with apparent impunity with a bunch of suspicious stuff.

Wonder why.... could it be that the Canucky Niggah is timid, afraid...?

Actually VA facilities are quite good, but if you Canucky niggahs poke around one might find a lot of things wrong.

Hey, Chink Boy, I got a real Rolex, still ticking after 33 years.. shove it up your slant eyed ass.

You are so full of shit that it is indeed pathological.

It gave a mentally ill asshole such as yerself a reason to post!

Hey, dipshit retarded one...

You keep yer drippin' nose out of our bidness and we just might keep our nose out of yours, capiche?

Have your sister come over here and blow me, boy.

like most Liberal/Democrat/Socialist/Marxists, you're just plain full of shit.

Like I just said, full of shit AND a clown 'tard Marxist/Socialist!

So, beat the rush and get the hell off of RRS, you f00kin retard.

Isn't that exactly how we got stuck with the clown 'tard Obama?

Talking about bonker clown 'tards, like you, moron!

Join your defective brothers/sisters in CanaDuh, you fOOkin 'tard boy!

All you got is a brain stem, you stupid lying 'tard.

You're the one that needs to move, 'tard boy.

Hit the road you fat f0000000kin clown 'tard.

Hit the road, ya f00000000kin clown 'tard.

Go find something to tote, clown 'tard.

Stuff it up your prancing ass, 'Tardo!

I wear the finest threads, 'tard boy!

you're just a malcontent 'tard boy.

Stop trying to suck up, 'tard boy.

Stuff a sock in it, clown 'tard.

Hey, clown 'tard, what's your answer, boy?

It was all about you, 'tard boy.

You tell 'em, Marxist 'tard boy!

You're mentally ill, 'tard boy

Stuff a sock in it, 'tard boy.

Really, clown 'tard, how so?

Cry us a river, clown 'tard.

Still waiting, clown 'tard. (twenty+ times in one thread)

You are the 'tard of SoCal.

LMFAO at the clown 'tard!

Hit the road, 'tard.

LMAO at the 'tard.

Get it, retard?

Fookin 'retard.

nothing but a clown 'tard academic.

Obama is a two-bit punk! Heck, he doesn't even care about his relatives who live in squalor. What a guy! He could send his brother $20 which would more than double his income, and, his brother could probably afford a 'double-wide' hut.

You clown 'tard fools have been stupified by your Liberal/Democrat/Marxist/Socialist masters into believing that all fault, and all blame lies at the feet of the 'evil corporations'.

Better naked than Marxist!

How the f00k would you know what I intended or not you worthless piece of Canadian excrement?

Tamp some cotton in it, little girl.

Obviously another clueless Canadian Cunt.

In all fairness, it is I who make you drool on command, dumbass.

I'll bet you use those Vise-Grip's when the gerbils get stuck, right?

You were an automatic dumbass at birth.

However, a pile of crap (such as yourself) is an idiot!

Quit crossposting, ya little queer Canuck.

"Do you realize how childish you look?"
Nope, I refuse to look in the mirror.

Take a walk, buttfuck.

Sheesh... another f00kin queer!

You are indeed a queer, are you not?

Who will you be bunking with, Bob?

Come lick me homo boy.

What a boring silly game.

Come and arrest me, cockbite.

Yep, the Great Spirit watches over us all!

You are worthless.

Yeah, go ahead, you drooling idiot.

Nope, but you're a faggot now, right?

Yer mama tossed ya because you're a homo boy, ain't that true?

Did I make any distinction with regard to country, you pedantic little cocksucker?

Blow me, faggot boy!

Fuck YOU, and fuck CanaDuh.

Now asswipe, go take your meds.

Take your meds, retard.

Humanity would be better served if 'Eduardo' were to take his shtick

And, 'Eddy', may I be so bold as to state that the best part of you

If one claims to be "harassed", one blows one's case

You are a nice retarded boy.

I don't know, though it might be fun to torture him!

Your move, bitch...

Dumbass Canucks, such as yourself, are not deserving of oxygen.

Even more ironic is that you never dispute the fact that you are a little cocksucker!

Tell Wonder Boy to shove it up his community activist ass.

Hey, dumbass, I don't watch the Fox News channel. So, you can shove that dumbass idea right up your gaping Liberal ass!

But hey, I made $14,000 trading oil today.. blow me

Funny how the US Govt. sent me over $50,000 last year

LMFAO as I sit and look at my royalty cheques...

Well, the poor, (I'm one of them) pay no income tax, so therefore the money that keeps things running comes from somewhere.

I prefer genuine ROLEX!

Shove it up your ass, you faux little SOB.

You're full of shit, SOB.

Many things get better after squeezing with ones fingers!

Jerking off not enough for you, boy?

Do you spit or swallow?

Very tasty!

Actually, I know quite a few homosexuals.

Ya right, suck my dick...

I interact on at least a weekly basis with them, and surprisingly enough, they themselves utter the words 'damn faggots' with those who tend to step out of line.

I don't 'fear' homos, oh faux one!

Well, when one considers that they are at least pleasuring themselves a good amount of the time then at least they can't cause to much trouble.

Come on! How can anyone be straight after free beer and sausages?

Everything is just fine. It's Tulip Time!

And, when I think about it, still brings tears to my eyes.

Is that the gay place to be?

Were you the blower or the blowee?

I know it may be hard, but as you withdraw, it will shrink away..

I have to try to remember that I am powerless over people, places,

CanaDuh, and dumbass Canucks, are the entertainment branch of the political world.

Fuckin' dumbass.

You are certainly an SOB, you stupid, MF'ing, liar and poseur!

WRNO FM 99.5 became Rush Radio today.
Rush mentioned it on the show, and also seemed to say that at least for a while they'd be carrying his show for 18 hours a day.

Your birth trait is that you're a MORON, dumbass.

Something for your faux Hispanic cock sucking brain to think about, eh?

Blow it out yer ass, Canuck!

Yes, I am witty, and I am wise!

my mommy blew it out her ass II wrote

True, ain't it, little faux Hispanic BOY.. (Heavy emphasis on the BOY!)

Stuff a taco in it, Ramon!

And don't forget SAMBLA, South American Man Boy Love Association.

Mouth wide open, ready to take a load.

After eating the taco's wouldn't they be capable of gassing themelves?

It is then my patriotic friend, you must reach in the closet, place your hands upon the weapon, and blow the cock sucking, bean blower back into Mary's arms....

They are mere asswipes, suitable for flushing.

How many American lives were affected by the slant eyed shit throughout the entire war?

Dumbass Canucks, sure ain't Rolex wearin' respectable folk...!

Or better yet, go get yourself some IBO Cock!

Yeah, after all, you're the Queen of your drug addled world.

And that has exactly what to do with the fact that CanaDuh is a Third World Country?

Canucks need to be castrated.

Shame? Sorry, I'm not a dumbass Canuck. Blow me, boy.

Hey, buttfuck boy... try to pay attention, you little piece of non-listening excrement.

Why are the retards mostly dumbass Canucks?

Run along little Canucky dweeb.

One of my nicknames, starting around 1975 or so has been 'Raoul'

Well, now you know them, and you know me, Karl Mauritania!

Obviously you're just a retard boy who failed as a corporate manager.

Did I say it was, shit for brains?

Because you're a moron, Druggie!

Ace is doing ok!

They don't call me 'Ace' for nothing!

And you, just another retard on the short bus.

All of my DX is better than your DX no matter what I do.

No expertise required, shit head, I just turn the radio on.

Tenacity makes a great DX'er.

Well, I cann assure most everyone here that I've done 100% of my DX'ing success.

Then you yourself must be an even dumber clown DXer, 'tard boy!

You claim to be 'Cherokee'... I think you're just 'Wannabee'...

No need to do anything more productive than cash the checks, invest the money, do some DX'ing, and rile up the mentally ill Canucks!

Why is it that you queers always seem to SIGH a lot? (1)

Did I actually use that?

No matter.

I just got off the phone with one of my good old DX'ing buddies from the east side

I'd be willing to be that any country with a dictator, who didn't expend their lives attempting to halt the dictator, pretty much had thoughts along those lines.

I'd imagine the people in new orleans, before katrina, were pretty smug and secure ...

It is all knowing what is real, and what ain't ... and when it makes no difference to the protection of your safety ...

Homeownerï¿½s Fight Involves Flag Tied to Tea Party
By MARC LACEY

LAVEEN, Ariz. ï¿½ Donï¿½t tread on Andy C. McDonel.

This year, Mr. McDonel began flying a yellow ï¿½Donï¿½t Tread on Meï¿½ flag on his roof in this unincorporated area just outside Phoenix. The historic banner ï¿½ which dates to 1775, when it was hoisted aboard ships during the initial days of the Revolutionary War ï¿½ has been adopted by the Tea Party movement. But Mr. McDonel said that he had unfurled the flag for its historical significance and nothing else.

He notes that the banner, the Gadsden flag, has been widely used over the years and was even featured on the cover of a rock album. ï¿½Am I a Metallica fan because Iï¿½m using the flag?ï¿½ he asked.

This month, he received a letter from the homeownersï¿½ association ordering him to remove ï¿½the debrisï¿½ from his roof. It threatened fines if the debris (i.e., the flag) did not go within 10 days. But Mr. McDonel, 32, a logistics operation manager, has vowed to fight the order.

ï¿½Itï¿½s a patriotic gesture,ï¿½ he said of his banner. ï¿½Itï¿½s a historic military flag. It represents the founding fathers. It shows this nation was born out of an idea.ï¿½

The Avalon Village Community Association, which sent the letter, takes a strict interpretation of the state statute that allows Arizonans the right to fly a variety of flags ï¿½ the Stars and Stripes, the state flag, flags representing Indian nations as well as the official flags of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines and Coast Guard.

The listing of acceptable flags stems from a dispute several years ago in nearby Chandler, Ariz., in which a woman with a son serving in Iraq was challenged by her homeownersï¿½ association for flying the Marine Corps flag. State legislators intervened.

The Arizona law, says the homeownersï¿½ association butting heads with Mr. McDonel, does not give residents authorization to fly anything else on their properties. That means no pennants bearing sports team logos, no Jolly Rogers, no rainbow banners celebrating gay pride and no historic flags showing a coiled rattlesnake bearing its fangs.

As Javier B. Delgado, a lawyer for the homeownersï¿½ association, put it in a statement on the associationï¿½s Web site:

ï¿½Should the Arizona Legislature expand the Community Association Flag Display Statute to include the Gadsden Flag, the Association will accommodate Mr. McDonelï¿½s desire to display it. Bottom-line, anyone considering residing in a community association should carefully review the associationï¿½s governing documents beforehand to ensure that the community is a good fit for them.ï¿½

Mr. McDonel knows the rules well since, until July, he was a member of his homeownersï¿½ associationï¿½s board of directors. He resigned in a dispute with the boardï¿½s president and shortly thereafter received his first debris notice. That one concerned a treadmill that he had left on his porch, which he admits was a violation of the rules. His second debris warning, which came weeks after that, concerned the flag, which had been up for about six months.

ï¿½If this is a grudge, itï¿½s sad that the funds that the homeowners put into the association are being wasted on such a petty matter,ï¿½ Mr. McDonel said.

Mr. Delgado, whose law firm represents thousands of homeownersï¿½ associations, denies that any dispute among board members led to the citation of Mr. McDonelï¿½s property. ï¿½There is still the potential for dialogue on both sides,ï¿½ he said, indicating that no fines had yet been levied.

The homeownersï¿½ association represents a community of tract homes in what had been a sprawling agricultural area.

A survey of Mr. McDonelï¿½s neighbors after the dispute drew the attention of the local news media revealed more concern about the television trucks that have been parking in front of his property than the flag flapping on his roof.

After Mr. McDonelï¿½s standoff was picked up by the media, the American Civil Liberties Union of Arizona jumped in on Mr. McDonelï¿½s side, arguing that homeownersï¿½ associations do not have the right to ï¿½hijackï¿½ the free speech rights of their members. The A.C.L.U. fired off a letter to the association on Monday that seeks a meeting with Mr. Delgado to resolve the matter without going as far as a lawsuit.

ï¿½Weï¿½re urging the homeownersï¿½ association to adopt a less limited interpretation of the statute,ï¿½ said Dan Pochoda, the legal director for the civil liberties group. ï¿½The Gadsden flag meets the spirit of the law. Itï¿½s a historic military flag. Many consider it the original American flag, before the Stars and Stripes.ï¿½

As for the political significance that the flag has taken on in this election season, Mr. Pochoda was uninterested, saying that Mr. McDonelï¿½s motivation for flying the flag was irrelevant to the dispute. ï¿½We didnï¿½t ask him,ï¿½ Mr. Pochoda said.

As the flag becomes more popular ï¿½ it was on prominent display on the Washington Mall last weekend during a rally organized by the conservative commentator Glenn Beck ï¿½ more such disputes are expected.

Already, a Colorado homeowner flying the same flag is locked in a standoff with his homeownersï¿½ association. And in Connecticut, a group of retired Marines is challenging the Capitol Policeï¿½s decision blocking the Gadsden flag from being flown over the State Capitol.

- Wrong.
- They were National Socialists (right wingers,
- which is why Preston Bush climbed in bed with them).

So which part of "National Socialist" is not 'Socialist'

The 'National' part . . .
-or-
The Socialist part . . .

Does Nationalism -cancel-out- Socialism ?

=IF+ that is the case then the only real, true and legitament Socialists are the International Socialist -aka- Communists.

What is the Best Direction to 'Point' a Sloper Antenna for DX ?

Given an area where you could locate a Sloper Antenna with a Tall Mounting Pole "Top-End-Feed-Point' and the ability to move the Bottom-Far-End around the full circle of 360 Degrees.

Where would you place 'Point' the Bottom-Far-End for the best DXing ? [N ? E ? W ? S ?] & WHY ?

Given that it is claimed that in general the Sloper produces it's best reception in the direction of the Bottom-Far-End.

Coax Cable to the Feed-Point and Top-End-Feed-Point.

Thinking of Rigging a Par Electronics EF-SWL Antenna
as a Sloper or buying one of these Pre-Make Slopers.

Just an observation, I noticed that Larbgay is using the word Creamer instead of Kramer. Why is this ? He has called Kramer a pedophile, probably to provoke, but I wonder if he's been warned that an E mail is a legal document and that he could be in trouble for it. Don't know when he changed the name but it would be interesting to know why.

Top-fed slopers in an open space are essentially omnidirectional. Most of the radiation happens at the feed point. The slantwire and the support structure form a low Q mass that also radiates, equally well in all directions.

Dale P. has always recommended using his PAR end-fed as a sloper with the feedpoint near the bottom and thus giving a nice short run to ground. Good omni results and a high radiation angle. I think this would work for me if I did not have such a battery of RFI generators around my home.

Actually, more like political totalitarianism combined with free-market

With the exception of celebrities, most income in excess of half a million is UNEARNED. It is excessive "producer surplus" or it is economic rent. These funds are essentially stolen from the common people and pocketed by the rich. All wealth is earned or naturally occurring.
But all too often the collectors of the wealth are not the producers of the wealth. And the redistribution of this stolen prosperity is the primary job of governments.

Would have been nice if they would have had it to read too. Would have

As I recall, and someone else might chime in, it is or was, a written or unwritten rule of the sea that one rendered assistance to those in need, regardless whether they were the enemy or not.

That would make sense, given the international nature of the conventions of the sea, and its navigation.

But it would also make sense in that the vessel rendering aid would be in an excellent position to gather intelligence on an enemy, and his materiel.

That is certainly a possibility!

But as I recall, and I might certainly be wrong, but as I remember, I don't think that vessels, people, etc. were fired upon if they were seen to be rendering aid.

Today perhaps, warfare is different I suppose, different 'rules', different times.

But, on land, might be different. I saw the D-Day movie, think it was 'Saving Private Ryan', and certainly those rendering aid were fired upon.

That movie, and the opening scene, will give most anyone nightmares.

If I had my life to live over, and I've said this before, I'd like to have been part of that, and hit the beach that day, 6 June 1944.

Elsewise, I'd like to have been with Nelson at Trafalgar, on October 21, 1812.

But that would eliminate the Tall rotational Center-Point

This is perhaps a case of mistaken identity at the time, and is at least an isolated incident.

Totally preposterous.

A man works his entire life so he can become a producer of, say, superb audio electronics, as a friend of mine did -- and he does so, is successful in producing his useful items and earns a few million, risking much and hiring many people in the process, from engineers to designers to floor sweepers.

What appalling and frightening hubris -- to declare that some elected criminal or appointed "authority" can take his life's work away from him.

It is often the super-rich (in the multibillionaire class) who are behind the kind of false-flag theft schemes that you advocate. They don't want any bright upstart new millionaire-class competitors.
Ever. So they love it when the new fellows are taxed or regulated out of existence -- taxes and regulations which the super-rich can evade through carefully-crafted loopholes or other tricks; and regulations they can afford, though the new upstarts can't.

We need bright, creative people to keep as much of the wealth they earn as possible. Because 1) that's justice, and 2) for our own selfish reasons -- because bright, creative people will do bright, creative things with that wealth, and that benefits us all.

Stealing it (the "primary job of government" according to you) and giving it to deadly dull bureaucrats and the spawn of the least intelligent among us will only end up increasing spinning hubcap sales, and Wal-Mart's and McDonald's bottom line. What a waste.

Furthermore, income "redistribution," though it devastates the lives of so many families and impoverishes our civilization, gives no lasting benefit to the people it's supposed to help.

If this Halloween you took _all_ the wealth of the nation and divided it _precisely equally_ among all the featherless bipeds in America, by New Year's eve there would be millionaires and poor people by the multiple millions. So the whole exercise is pointless even if you accept its tyrannical and unconstitutional central premise.

Of course, there are fraudsters who steal other people's wealth (besides bureaucrats and congressmen, I mean).

The most egregious among them are the bankers, and I don't mean just the Fed. I mean the entire commercial banking system, which makes "loans" on demand deposits -- which is essentially creating money out of thin air, on which "created" money they have a license to collect interest. That _is_ theft, and shouldn't be allowed.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

I'm always confused, and many of you might agree!

When I (we) transited the Suez Canal, I recall seeing individuals who were obviously kneeling and praying.

As we passed, they got up, saw us, and waved, jumping up and down. We waved back.

I'll not forget that, knowing that wherever our flag is shown, we have friends.

Liberating America From Israel

by Paul Findley

Nine-eleven would not have occurred if the U.S. government had refused to help Israel humiliate and destroy Palestinian society. Few express this conclusion publicly, but many believe it is the truth. I believe the catastrophe could have been prevented if any U.S. president during the past 35 years had had the courage and wisdom to suspend all U.S. aid until Israel withdrew from the Arab land seized in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

The U.S. lobby for Israel is powerful and intimidating, but any determined president-even President Bush this very day-could prevail and win overwhelming public support for the suspension of aid by laying these facts before the American people:

Israel's present government, like its predecessors, is determined to annex the West Bank-biblical Judea and Samaria - so Israel will become Greater Israel. Ultra-Orthodox Jews, who maintain a powerful role in Israeli politics, believe the Jewish Messiah will not come until Greater Israel is a reality. Although a minority in Israel, they are committed, aggressive, and influential. Because of deep religious conviction, they are determined to prevent Palestinians from gaining statehood on any part of the West Bank.

In its violent assaults on Palestinians, Israel uses the pretext of eradicating terrorism, but its forces are actually engaged advancing the territorial expansion just cited. Under the guise of anti-terrorism, Israeli forces treat Palestinians worse than cattle. With due process nowhere to be found, hundreds are detained for long periods and most are tortured. Some are assassinated. Homes, orchards, and business places are destroyed. Entire cities are kept under intermittent curfew, some confinements lasting for weeks. Injured or ill Palestinians needing emergency medical care are routinely held at checkpoints for an hour or more. Many children are undernourished. The West Bank and Gaza have become giant concentration camps. None of this could have occurred without U.S. support. Perhaps Israeli officials believe life will become so unbearable that most Palestinians will eventually leave their ancestral homes.

Once beloved worldwide, the U.S. government finds itself reviled in most countries because it provides unconditional support of Israeli violations of the United Nations Charter, international law, and the precepts of all major religious faiths.

How did the American people get into this fix?

Nine-eleven had its principal origin 35 years ago when Israel's U.S. lobby began its unbroken success in stifling debate about the proper U.S. role in the Arab-Israeli conflict and effectively concealed from public awareness the fact that the U.S. government gives massive uncritical support to Israel.

Thanks to the suffocating influence of Israel's U.S. lobby, open discussion of the Arab-Israeli conflict has been non-existent in our government all these years. I have firsthand knowledge, because I was a member of the House of Representatives Foreign Affairs Committee in June 1967 when Israeli military forces took control of the Golan Heights, a part of Syria, as well as the Palestinian West Bank and Gaza. I continued as a member for 16 years and to this day maintain a close watch on Congress.

For 35 years, not a word has been expressed in that committee or in either chamber of Congress that deserves to be called debate on Middle East policy. No restrictive or limiting amendments on aid to Israel have been offered for 20 years, and none of the few offered in previous years received more than a handful of votes. On Capitol Hill, criticism of Israel, even in private conversation, is all but forbidden, treated as downright unpatriotic, if not anti-Semitic. The continued absence of free speech was assured when those few who spoke out-Senators Adlai Stevenson and Charles Percy, and Reps. Paul "Pete" McCloskey, Cynthia McKinney, Earl Hilliard, and myself-were defeated at the polls by candidates heavily financed by pro-Israel forces.

As a result, legislation dealing with the Middle East has been heavily biased in favor of Israel and against Palestinians and other Arabs year after year. Home constituencies, misled by news coverage equally lop-sided in Israel's favor, remain largely unaware that Congress behaves as if it were a subcommittee of the Israeli parliament.

However, the bias is widely noted beyond America, where most news media candidly cover Israel's conquest and generally excoriate America's complicity and complacency. When President Bush welcomed Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, sometimes called the Butcher of Beirut, as "my dear friend" and "a man of peace" after Israeli forces, using U.S.-donated arms, completed their devastation of the West Bank last spring, worldwide anger against American policy reached the boiling point.

The fury should surprise no one who reads foreign newspapers or listens to BBC. In several televised statements long before 9/11, Osama bin Laden, believed by U.S. authorities to have masterminded 9/11, cited U.S. complicity in Israel's destruction of Palestinian society as a principal complaint. Prominent foreigners, in and out of government, express their opposition to U.S. policies with unprecedented frequency and severity, especially since Bush announced his determination to make war against Iraq.

The lobby's intimidation remains pervasive. It seems to reach every government center and even houses of worship and revered institutions of higher learning. It is highly effective in silencing the many U.S. Jews who object to the lobby's tactics and Israel's brutality...

Today, a year after 9/11, President Bush has made no attempt to redress grievances, or even to identify them. In fact, he has made the scene far worse by supporting Israel's religious war against Palestinians, an alliance that has intensified anti-American anger. He seems oblivious to the fact that nearly two billion people worldwide regard the plight of Palestinians as today's most important foreign-policy challenge. No one in authority will admit a calamitous reality that is skillfully shielded from the American people but clearly recognized by most of the world: America suffered 9/11 and its aftermath and may soon be at war with Iraq, mainly because U.S. policy in the Middle East is made in Israel, not in Washington.

Israel is a scofflaw nation and should be treated as such. Instead of helping Sharon intensify Palestinian misery, our president should suspend all aid until Israel ends its occupation of Arab land Israel seized in 1967. The suspension would force Sharon's compliance or lead to his removal from office, as the Israeli electorate will not tolerate a prime minister who is at odds with the White House.

If Bush needs an additional reason for doing the right thing, he can justify the suspension as a matter of military necessity, an essential step in winning international support for his war on terrorism. He can cite a worthy precedent. When President Abraham Lincoln issued the proclamation that freed only the slaves in states that were then in rebellion, he make the restriction because of "military necessity."

If Bush suspends U.S. aid, he will liberate all Americans from long years of bondage to Israel's misdeeds.

Jews say that being "anti-Semitic" is a terrible crime. Do they say being "anti-Arab" is a terrible crime? What about "anti-Christian", or "anti-German"? Of course the Jews think they are special. Any other group could be our enemy, but not the Jews, they say. The Jews tell us the Arabs are our enemies. The Jewish controlled media tells us that the Jews are America's only friend in the Middle East. The truth is that before these Jews America didn't have any enemies in the Middle East.

No one is moaning because America once fought the British. But suddenly Jews can not be the enemy under any circumstances. Why is that? Because the Jews control the media. Think outside the box.

Now that America is ruled by the Jews it is no insult to be called "anti-Semite". The insult is that they think we care about their self serving verbiage.

The Jewish controlled media said the French were "cheese eating surrender monkeys". Why can't the French howl "anti-French" like the Jews howl "anti-Semite"? Because the French don't control the media, Jews do.

http://www.hnn.us/comments/15664.html

"There may be some truth in that if the Arabs have some complaints about my policy towards Israel, they have to realize that the Jews in the U.S. control the entire information and propaganda machine, the large newspapers, the motion pictures, radio and television, and the big companies. And there is a force that we have to take into consideration."

Your comprehension also suffers. The correct form of your sentence would have been:

"the guiding spirit of America is Americanism"

NOT

"the guiding spirit of american is americanism"

'American' is an adjective. You need a proper NOUN there.

The only problem, liar, is that I have not advocated any scheme and that I recognize most of the "schemes" of those that are advocates.

This pig crap about "loopholes" seems to be a major preoccupation among the stupid and the liars. There are doubtless some "loopholes" that are earmarks and the like which do not serve the greater good. But a deduction or even a credit for something in energy conservation or new energy deployment is created for a reason.

And exactly why do you have this asinine opinion that I would disagree with those who earn their dough, keeping the dough? I have not ever claimed that earned income and earned wealth should be heavily taxed. If I disagree with most on the "right side of the spectrum" I see innovation and actual creation as inherent in man and that it is almost impossible to keep men from dreaming and imagining and pursuing new and better technology. The proposition that technological advance is based on the search for riches is a Republican lie. Most of us seek "fame" as opposed to money. And that is only secondary to the will to discover something new.

It should be allowed to the extent necessary to support a reasonable financial sector of the economy. As it is, that is not the case, and an unreasonable amount of money is being REDISTRIBUTED to the financiers of all stripes.

Though I have not been living on the West coast, nevertheless one cannot expect strong signals from certain areas over there . In dealing with such unstable propagation as we had in the last few years a single antenna may not be sufficient and re-orienting it may not be enough. Over here,in NYC I tried using a commercially made sloper antenna in the early 90's and didn't see it performing substantially better than a simple random length wire. That applies only to my location,that is. . . The best antenna I EVER had was a home-made T2FD. Much quieter,had some gain and it was absolutely omnidirectional as far as I know. It used a 9:1 balun transformer from Palomar (sadly they stopped making it). Reception was outstanding,considering the RFI and other man-made noise omnipresent over here.

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown. Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2008 FCC rules and Sep 2009 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:
http://www.ntia.doc.gov/osmhome/redbook/redbook.html

Frequencies are in kHz. Usual spacing in shortwave broadcast bands is 5 kHz. Frequencies above 10000 kHz tend to propagate better during the day; frequencies below 10000 kHz tend to propagate better at night.

Phone line as SW antenna

Changes preceded by "|".

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area. Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the
| telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead. Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should | be rated 250 volts or higher.

Phone line RF connector
red .01 uF center cond. / \ or o--------||-----------------------------|-o | To receiver
green \ /
50 ohm coax |
ground |
or o-----------------------------------------+ N.C. shield

N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:

Phone line RF connector
red -------- center cond. / \
or o----| |-------------------------|-o | To receiver
green | | \ /
| FILTER | 50 ohm coax |
ground | | |
or o----| |----------------------------+
```

| RECOMMENDED FILTERS

| terminal):

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

From: bill@videovax.tv.tek.com (William K. McFadden)
Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

From: johns@uhunix.uhcc.Hawaii.Edu (John Shalamskas)
Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

LOW-PASS FILTER (Rejects FM, TV, etc.)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

The proper way to connect them is in series, i.e.

signal in ------- filter 1 -------- filter 2 -------- signal out

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics, left and right ends are interchangeable.)

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

PARTS SOURCE

Parts for the filters can be obtained from the following source:

- Though I have not been living on the West coast,
- nevertheless one cannot expect strong signals
- from certain areas over there . In dealing with
- such unstable propagation as we had in the last - few years a single antenna may not be sufficient
- and re-orienting it may not be enough.
- Over here,in NYC I tried using a commercially made
- sloper antenna in the early 90's and didn't see it
- performing substantially better than a simple
- random length wire. That applies only to my
- location,that is. . .

- The best antenna I EVER had was a home-made
- T2FD. Much quieter,had some gain and it was
- absolutely omnidirectional as far as I know.

T2FD : Terminated Tilted Folded Dipole Shortwave Antenna
http://www.johncon.com/john/T2fd/

- It used a 9:1 balun transformer from Palomar
- (sadly they stopped making it).

-fyi- The Palomar Engineers "MLB-1" Magnetic Longwire Balun for Shortwave {Radio} Listening Antennas is still being made. ~$50US http://www.palomar-engineers.com/MLB-1/mlb-1.html

- Reception was outstanding,considering the RFI
- and other man-made noise omnipresent over here.

Several years ago I bought a used Wellbrook [UK] Universal Magnetic Balun UMB T2FD and never http://www.wellbrook.uk.com/UMBT2FD.html got around to using it. IIRC it is somewhere down in sub-basement # 3 -but- like I bought it and stuck it on a shelf and don't think that I have seen it in years. Heck I have not been down to check out sub-basement # 3 in years . . . hope that the sump pumps are still working . . . got to add that to my To-Do List on the next trip to Alameda, CA.

I already have two SWL Antennas up here in Twain Harte, CA -but- neither seems bring in Europe; the Middle-East; Africa and India.
* Inverted "L" Antenna with a Ground Rod mounted WinRadio WR-LWA-0130 Long Wire Adapter Matching Transformer; and Coax Cable feed-in-line.
Antenna Element : 26 Foot Vertical-Up-Leg
-by- 103 Foot Horizontal-Out-Arm with the Far-End pointed at 275 Degrees.
* Horizontal Antenna 100 Foot make-up of a 5-Wire Rotar Cable with each Wire "cut-to' a Shortwave Radio Band :
http://www.google.com/group/rec.radio.shortwave/msg/aea23fa41d6f5241
1 @ 98 Feet ~ 120m SW Band
2 @ 71 Feet ~ 90m SW Band
3 @ 59 Feet ~ 75m SW Band
4 @ 48 Feet ~ 60m SW Band
5 @ 39 Feet ~ 49m SW Band using an RF Systems MLB with Far-End pointed at 30 Degrees and Ground into a

RG6/UQ Feed-in-Line

The Sloper Antenna would be SWL Antenna # 3 and pointed in the one best direction to consistantly and reliably Receive [DX] : Europe; the Middle-East; Africa and India. -if- that is possible . . .

I don't know if the original claim of omnidirectionality is true or false.

But I do know that a given antenna's pattern doesn't change between receive and transmit.

The best way to determine the pattern of an antenna, short of actually measuring it on an antenna range, is to model it on your computer. Eznec does a great job of this (don't forget to enter an appropriately lossy ground emulation for your location) and the demo version is free.

Some people listen to Fox News all the time and do no get any other varied ideas. A person can now begin at 6 a.m. EDT with Bill Bennett's radio show and go well into late night (Rusty Humphries on WDBO from 1-4 a.m.) and hear and astounding numbers of different takes on issues. Each personality brings something to the tables for conservatives. Sometimes I find Dr. Bennett a bit nerdie, but he has fantastic guests and discussions with them. Glenn Beck make me think about US history like no one before. I prefer to listen to Laura Ingraham and watch Glenn on Fox at 5 p.m.

There's no missing Rush because he is the true voice of America. I recently discovered that I can listen to Jerry Doyle online after Rush's show. He describes himself as an independent conservative. He can be an curmudgeon sometimes, but as a former stockbroker, an actor and pilot, he has an interesting slant on things. Let's not forget Michael Savage! There's no hold barred and he gives it to everyone else on talk radio.
He gets overlooked and he's under appreciated in my opinion. At 9 p.m. I can get online and listen to the John Batchelor show which is very good. Lastly, there's Rusty Humphries who's good, too. I used to listen to Larry Elder who was replaced by Mark Levin on ABC radio, and he was also good but a little uppity at times.

My point is no one has to listen to just one, two or three personalities! Conservative commentators and radio programs are readily available online. I listen to Rush on my hometown station so I can here the local news.

We do not need to be back-biting people in our camp! God has given all us unique talents, and that applies to talk show hosts, too!

I use a sloper "L".
The long leg is North/South and the short leg is high and East/West.

Seems to work fine for me.

The Cole was motionless in hostile waters. There should have been a watch on deck with heavy guns. Anytime a warship is a sitting duck they should be watching radar watch and have eyeballs on the perimeter.

In the last few years at least two children have been killed by Pitbull dogs in the Jackson,Mississippi metro area.

There was an Army Guard Dog Training Base on Cat Island,Mississippi in World War Two.We had some Army Guard Dogs at SL 60, near Pacific,Missouriah in 1963.U.S.Military had some Guard Dogs at Tan Son Nhut too.I did not see any Army Pitbull Guard Dogs.Mostly, they were German Shepard Army Guard Dogs, real GOOD Dogs they were.

That's why they call it DX, I guess! Our California location simply is not at anybody's target area, and only occasionally off the backside of the beam. If we were in someone's sights, or if we had that extra bit of ocean between us and them, we'd probably hear them better.

Also, most of the European stations either totally ignore NA or else use relays to get their point across, resulting in service only from other locations. The ones that still use their native soils for transmitting to us - Czechia, Romania, Albania - all manage fairly well some of the time.

India is especially absent from California airwaves. Don't know why, exactly.

Ah but said cat might get put in a tube.

A Straight Dope Classic from Cecil's Storehouse of Human Knowledge
The story of Schroedinger's cat (an epic poem)
May 7, 1982

Dear Cecil:

Cecil, you're my final hope

Of finding out the true Straight Dope

For I have been reading of Schroedinger's cat

But none of my cats are at all like that.

This unusual animal (so it is said)

Is simultaneously live and dead!

What I don't understand is just why he Can't be one or other, unquestionably.

My future now hangs in between eigenstates.

In one I'm enlightened, the other I ain't.

If you understand, Cecil, then show me the way

And rescue my psyche from quantum decay.

But if this queer thing has perplexed even you,

Then I will and won't see you in Schroedinger's zoo.

— Randy F., Chicago

Cecil replies:

Schroedinger, Erwin! Professor of physics!

Wrote daring equations! Confounded his critics!

(Not bad, eh? Don't worry. This part of the verse Starts off pretty good, but it gets a lot worse.)

Win saw that the theory that Newton'd invented

By Einstein's discov'ries had been badly dented.

What now? wailed his colleagues. Said Erwin, "Don't panic,

No grease monkey I, but a quantum mechanic.

Consider electrons. Now, these teeny articles

Are sometimes like waves, and then sometimes like particles.

If that's not confusing, the nuclear dance

Of electrons and suchlike is governed by chance!

No sweat, though--my theory permits us to judge

Where some of 'em is and the rest of 'em was."

Not everyone bought this. It threatened to wreck

The comforting linkage of cause and effect.

E'en Einstein had doubts, and so Schroedinger tried

To tell him what quantum mechanics implied.

Said Win to Al, "Brother, suppose we've a cat,

And inside a tube we have put that cat at--

Along with a solitaire deck and some Fritos,

A bottle of Night Train, a couple mosquitoes

(Or something else rhyming) and, oh, if you got 'em,

One vial prussic acid, one decaying ottom

Or atom--whatever--but when it emits,

A trigger device blasts the vial into bits

Which snuffs our poor kitty. The odds of this crime

Are 50 to 50 per hour each time.

The cylinder's sealed. The hour's passed away. Is

Our pussy still purring--or pushing up daisies?

Now, you'd say the cat either lives or it don't

But quantum mechanics is stubborn and won't.

Statistically speaking, the cat (goes the joke),

Is half a cat breathing and half a cat croaked.

To some this may seem a ridiculous split,

But quantum mechanics must answer, "Tough shit.

We may not know much, but one thing's fo' sho':

There's things in the cosmos that we cannot know.

Shine light on electrons--you'll cause them to swerve.

The act of observing disturbs the observed--

Which ruins your test. But then if there's no testing

To see if a particle's moving or resting

Why try to conjecture? Pure useless endeavor!

We know probability--certainty, never.'

The effect of this notion? I very much fear

'Twill make doubtful all things that were formerly clear.

Till soon the cat doctors will say in reports,

"We've just flipped a coin and we've learned he's a corpse."'

So saith Herr Erwin. Quoth Albert, "You're nuts.

God doesn't play dice with the universe, putz.

I'll prove it!" he said, and the Lord knows he tried--

In vain--until fin'ly he more or less died.

Win spoke at the funeral: "Listen, dear friends,

Sweet Al was my buddy. I must make amends.

Though he doubted my theory, I'll say of this saint:

Ten-to-one he's in heaven--but five bucks says he ain't."

— Cecil Adams

Yes, he gets to Asilomar SB and reels out his portable antenna away from the RFI - and reels the stations in. Oh, to be retired!

Around here, though, those lower HF bands are exceedingly noisy and

Sorry for your noise, as I'm still working on a bit of an issue here myself.

But I'm still amazed that at times I can hear Radio Fly, PNG, on 5960 at times

Report of Former Vice President Spiro Agnew

"The people who own and manage national impact media are Jewish and, with other influential Jews, helped create a disastrous U.S. Mideast policy. All you have to do is check the real policy makers and owners and you find a much higher concentration of Jewish people than you're going to find in the population. By national impact media I am referring to the major news wire services, pollsters, Time and Newsweek Magazines, the New York Times, Washington Post, and the International Herald Tribune. For example, CBS' Mr. (William) Paley's Jewish. Mr. Julian Goodman, who runs NBC, and there's a Leonard Goldenson at ABC. Mrs. Katherine Graham owns the Washington Post and Mr. Sulzberger the New York Times. They are all Jews!

You go down the line in that fashion...not just with ownership but go down to the managing posts and discretionary posts... and you'll find that through their aggressiveness and their inventiveness, they now dominate the news media. Not only in the media, but in academic communities, the financial communities, in the foundations, in all sorts of highly visible and influential services that involve the public, they now have a tremendous voice.

Our policy in the Middle East in my judgment is disastrous, because it's not even handed. I see no reason why nearly half the foreign aid this nation has to give goes to Israel, except for the influence of this Zionist lobby. I think the power of the news media is in the hands of a few people...it's not subject to control of the voters, it's subject only to the whim of the board of directors." (Former Vice President Spiro Agnew)

Charles A. Lindberg, Wartime Journals, May 1, 1941
1st Statement:
"We are disturbed about the effect of the Jewish influence on our press, radio, and motion pictures. It may become very serious. (Fulton) Lewis told us of one instance where the Jewish advertising firms threatened to remove all their advertising from the Mutual System if a certain feature was permitted to go on the air. The threat was powerful enough to have the feature removed." (Charles A. Lindberg, Wartime Journals, May 1, 1941).

Charles A. Lindberg, Wartime Journals, May 1, 1941
2nd Statement:
Thursday, May 1, 1941: "The pressure for war is high and mounting. The people are opposed to it, but the Administration seems to have 'the bit in its teeth' and is hell-bent on its way to war. Most of the Jewish interests in the country are behind war, and they control a huge part of our press and radio and most of our motion pictures. There are the 'intellectuals' and the 'Anglophiles,' and the British agents who are allowed free rein, the international financial interests, and many others." (The Wartime Journals)

The Jews Own The Press-The Siege
"The Jews...are at the root of regicide, they own the periodical press, they have in their hands the financial markets, the people as a whole fall into financial slavery to them..." (The Siege, p. 38)

Nat Rosenberg, International Jewish News
"Federation played a major part in Jewish life throughout the world. There is a federation in every community of the world where there is a substantial number of Jews. Today there is a central movement that is capable of mustering all of its planning, financial and political resources within twenty-four hours, geared to handling any particular issue. Proportionately, we have more power than any other comparable group, far beyond our numbers. The reason is that we are probably the most well organized minority in the world." (Nat Rosenberg, Denver Allied Jewish Federation, International Jewish News, January 30, 1976)

Martin Peretz, New Republic Editor-in-Chief
"Much of what you have read about the war in Lebanon-and even more of what you have seen and heard on television - is simply not true." (New Republic Editor-in-chief Martin Peretz)

Pastoral letter issued in 1936
"A Jewish question exists, and there will be one as long as the Jews remain Jews. It is an actual fact that the Jews fight against the Catholic Church. They are free thinkers, and constitute a vanguard of Atheism, Bolshevism and Revolution...One should protect one's self against the evil influence of Jewish morals, and particularly boycott the Jewish Press and their demoralizing publications." (Pastoral letter issued in 1936. "An Answer to Father Caughlin's Critics," page 98) top of page

Cecile De Tormay, Le livre proscrit, p. 135
Among modern nations with their short memories, the Jewish people...Whether despised or feared it remains an eternal stranger. it comes without invitation and remains even when driven out. It is scattered and yet coherent. It takes up its abode in the very body of the nations. It creates laws beyond and above the laws. It denies the idea of a homeland but it possesses its own homeland which it carries along with it and establishes wherever it goes. It denies the god of other peoples and everywhere rebuilds the temple. It complains of its isolation, and by mysterious channels it links together the parts of the infinite New Jerusalem which covers the whole universe. It has connections and ties everywhere, which explains how capital and the Press, concentrated in its hands, conserve the same designs in every country of the world, and the interests of the race which are identical in Ruthenian villages and in the City of New York; if it extols someone he is glorified all over the world, and if it wishes to ruin someone the work of destruction is carried out as if directed by a single hand.

The orders come from the depths of Mysterious Darkness. That which the Jew jeers at and destroys among other peoples, it fanatically preserves in the bosom of Judaism. If it teaches revolt and anarchy to others, it in itself shows admirable obedience to its invisible guides.

In the time of the Turkish revolution, a Jew said proudly to my father: 'It is we who are making it, we, the Young Turks, the Jews.' During the Portuguese revolution, I heard the Marquis de Vasconcellos, Portuguese ambassador at Rome, say 'The Jews and the Free Masons are directing the revolution in Lisbon.' Today when the greater part of Europe is given up to the revolution, they are everywhere leading the movement, according to a single plan. How did they succeed in concealing this plan which embraced the whole world and which was not the work of a few months or even years? They used as a screen men of each country, blind, frivolous, venal, forward, or stupid, and who knew nothing. And thus they worked in security, these redoubtable organizers, these sons of an ancient race which knows how to keep a secret. And that is why none of them has betrayed the others." (Cecile De Tormay, Le livre proscrit, p. 135; The Secret Powers Behind Revolution, by Vicomte Leon De Poncins, pp. 141-143)

J. Eberle, Grossmacht Press, Vienna, 1920
"An intelligent man, thoroughly familiar with the newspapers, can, after half an hour conversation, tell anyone what newspaper he reads...even high prelates of Rome, even Cardinals Amette and Mercier show themselves more influenced by the Press of their country than they themselves probably realize...often I have noticed that it is according to his newspaper that one judges the Papal Bull or the speech of the Prime Minister." (J. Eberle, Grossmacht Press, Vienna, 1920; The Secret Powers Behind Revolution, by Vicomte Leon De Poncins, p. 171)

J. Eberle, Grossmacht Press, Vienna, p. 204
"The great telegraphic agencies of the world which are everywhere the principal source of news for the Press (just as wholesale businesses supply the retailers), which spreads far and wide that which the world should know or should not know, and in the form which they wish, these agencies are either Jewish property or obey Jewish direction. The situation is the same for the smaller agencies which supply news to the newspapers of less importance, the great publicity agencies which receive commercial advertisements and which then insert them in the newspapers at the price of a large commission for themselves, are principally in the hands of the Jews; so are many provincial newspapers. Even when the Jewish voice is not heard directly in the Press, there comes into play the great indirect influences, Free Masonry, Finance, etc.

In many places Jews content themselves with this hidden influence, just as in economic life they consider Joint-Stock companies as the most profitable. The editors may quite well be Aryans, it is sufficient that in all important questions they should stand for Jewish interests, or at least that they should not oppose them. This is achieved nearly always by the pressure of advertisement agencies." J. Eberle, Grossmacht Press, Vienna, p. 204; The Secret Powers Behind Revolution, by Vicomte Leon De Poncins, p. 174)

F. Trocase, L'Autriche juive, 1898, A. Pierret, ed., Paris
"The Jewish Press of Vienna sold everything, put everything at a price, artistic fame as well as success in business. No intellectual production, no work of art has been able to see the light of day and reach public notice, without passing by the crucible of the Jewish Press, without having to submit to its criticism or to pay for its approval. If an artist should wish to obtain the approbation of the public, he must of necessity bow before the all powerful Jewish journals. If a young actress, a musician, a singer of talent should wish to make her first appearance and to venture before a more of less numerous audience, she has in most cases not dared to do so, unless after paying tribute to the desires of the Jews. Otherwise she would experience certain failure. It was despotic tyranny re-established, this time for the profit of the Jews and brutally exercised by them in all its plentitude.

Such as it is revealed by its results, the Viennese Press dominated by Judaism, has been absolutely disastrous. It is a work of death which it has accomplished. Around it and outside it all is void. In all the classes of the population are the germs of hatred, the seeds, of discord and of jealously, dissolution and decomposition." (F. Trocase, L'Autriche juive, 1898, A. Pierret, ed., Paris; The Secret Powers Behind Revolution, by Vicomte Leon De Poncins, pp. 175-176)

N.H. Webster, London, 1924
"When I first began to write on Revolution a well known London Publisher said to me; 'Remember that if you take an anti-revolutionary line you will have the whole literary world against you.' This appeared to me extraordinary. Why should the literary world sympathize with a movement which, from the French revolution onwards, has always been directed against literature, art, and science, and has openly proclaimed its aim to exalt the manual workers over the intelligentsia? 'Writers must be proscribed as the most dangerous enemies of the people' said Robespierre; his colleague Dumas said all clever men should be guillotined. The system of persecutions against men of talents was organized...they cried out in the Sections (of Paris) 'Beware of that man for he has written a book.' Precisely the same policy has been followed in Russia under moderate socialism in Germany the professors, not the 'people,' are starving in garrets. Yet the whole Press of our country is permeated with subversive influences. Not merely in partisan works, but in manuals of history or literature for use in schools, Burke is reproached for warning us against the French Revolution and Carlyle's panegyric is applauded.

And whilst every slip on the part of an anti-revolutionary writer is seized on by the critics and held up as an example of the whole, the most glaring errors not only of conclusions but of facts pass unchallenged if they happen to be committed by a partisan of the movement. The principle laid down by Collot d'Herbois still holds good: 'Tout est permis pour quiconque agit dans le sens de la revolution.'

All this was unknown to me when I first embarked on my work. I knew that French writers of the past had distorted facts to suit their own political views, that conspiracy of history is still directed by certain influences in the Masonic lodges and the Sorbonne [The facilities of literature and science of the University of Paris]; I did not know that this conspiracy was being carried on in this country. Therefore the publisher's warning did not daunt me. If I was wrong either in my conclusions or facts I was prepared to be challenged. Should not years of laborious historical research meet either with recognition or with reasoned and scholarly refutation? But although my book received a great many generous appreciative reviews in the Press, criticisms which were hostile took a form which I had never anticipated. Not a single honest attempt was made to refute either my French Revolution or World Revolution by the usual methods of controversy; Statements founded on documentary evidence were met with flat contradiction unsupported by a shred of counter evidence. In general the plan adopted was not to disprove, but to discredit by means of flagrant misquotations, by attributing to me views I had never expressed, or even by means of offensive personalities. It will surely be admitted that this method of attack is unparalleled in any other sphere of literary controversy." (N.H. Webster, Secret Societies and Subversive Movements, London, 1924, Preface; The Secret Powers Behind Revolution, by Vicomte Leon De Poncins, pp. 179-180)

International Jew, by Henry Ford, 1922
"It is rather surprising is it not? That which ever way you turn to trace the harmful streams of influence that flow through society, you come upon a group of Jews. In sports corruption, a group of Jews. In exploiting finance, a group of Jews. In theatrical degeneracy, a group of Jews. In liquor propaganda, a group of Jews. Absolutely dominating the wireless communications of the world, a group of Jews. The menace of the movies, a group of Jews. In control of the press through business and financial pressure, a group of Jews. War profiteers, 80 percent of them, Jews. The mezmia of so-called popular music, which combines weak mindedness, with every suggestion of lewdness, Jews. Organizations of anti-Christian laws and customs, again Jews. It is time to show that the cry of bigot is raised mostly by bigots. There is a religious prejudice in this country; there is, indeed, a religious persecution, there is a forcible shoving aside of the religious liberties of the majority of the people. And this prejudice and persecution and use of force, is Jewish and nothing but Jewish. If it is anti-Semitism to say that Communism in the United States is Jewish, so be it. But to the unprejudiced mind it will look very much like Americanism. Communism all over the world and not only in Russia is Jewish." (International Jew, by Henry Ford, 1922)

The Patriot (London) November 9, 1939
"There is, however, no real evidence that the Soviet Government has changed its policy of communism under control of the Bolsheviks, or has loosened its control of communism in other countries, or has ceased to be under Jew control. Unwanted tools certainly have been 'liquidated' in Russia by Stalin in his determination to be the supreme head, and it is not unnatural that some Jews, When all the leading positions were held by them, have suffered in the process of rival elimination. Outside Russia, events in Poland show how the Comintern still works. The Polish Ukraine has been communized under Jewish commissars, with property owners either shot or marched into Russia as slaves, with all estates confiscated and all business and property taken over by the State. It has been said in the American Jewish Press that the Bolshevik advance into the Ukraine was to save the Jews there from meeting the fate of their co-religionists in Germany, but this same Press is silent as to the fate meted out to the Christian Poles.

In less than a month, in any case, the lie has been given to Molotov's non-interference statement. Should international communism ever complete its plan of bringing civilization to naught, it is conceivable that some form of World Government in the hands of a few men could emerge, which would not be communism. It would be the domination of barbarous tyrants over the world of slaves, and communism would have been used as the means to an end." (The Patriot (London) November 9, 1939; The Rulers of Russia, Denis Fahey, pp. 23-24)

G.K.'s Weekly, February 4, 1937, Hilaire Belloc
"As for anyone who does not know that the present revolutionary Bolshevist movement is Jewish in Russia, I can only say that he must be a man who is taken in by the suppressions of our deplorable Press." (G.K.'s Weekly, February 4, 1937, Hilaire Belloc)

Charles Sarolea, Belgian Consul
"I am quite ready to admit that the Jewish leaders are only a proportionately infinitesimal fraction, even as the British rulers of India are an infinitesimal fraction. But it is none the less true that those few Jewish leaders are the masters of Russia, even as the fifteen hundred Anglo-Indian Civil Servants are the masters of India. For any traveler in Russia to deny such a truth would be to deny the evidence of our own senses. When you find that out of a large number of important Foreign Office officials whom you have met, all but two are Jews, you are entitled to say that the Jews are running the Russian Foreign Office." (The Mystical Body of Christ in the Modern World, a passage quoted from Impressions of Soviet Russia, by Charles Sarolea, Belgian Consul in Edinburgh and Professor of French Literature in the University of Edinburgh, pp. 93-94; The Rulers of Russia, Denis Fahey, pp. 31-32)

All These Things, A.N. Field
"The reader may wonder why newspapers never mention that Bolshevism is simply a Jewish conquest of Russia. The explanation is that the international news agencies on which papers rely for foreign news are controlled by Jews. The Jew, Jagoda, is head of the G.P.U. (the former Cheka), now called 'The People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs.' The life, death or imprisonment of Russian citizens is in the hands of this Jew, and his spies are everywhere. According to the anti-Comintern bulletin (15/4/35) Jagoda's organization between 1929 and 1934 drove between five and six million Russian peasants from their homes. (The Government of France now (July, 1936) has as Prime Minister, the Jewish Socialist, Leon Blum. According to the French journal Candide, M. Blum has substantial interests in Weiler's Jupiter aero-engine works in France, and his son, Robert Blum, is manager of a branch Weiler works in Russia, making Jupiter aero-engines for the Russian Government)." (All These Things, A.N. Field; The Rulers of Russia, Denis Fahey, p. 37)

The Cause of World Unrest (1920), Gerard Shelley
"Marxism, on which Bolshevism is founded, really did not express the political side of the Russian character and the Bolsheviks were not sincere Socialists or Communists, but Jews, working for the ulterior motives of Judaism. Lev Cherny divided these Jews into three main classes, firstly, financial Jews, who dabbled in muddy international waters; secondly, Zionists, whose aims are, of course, well known; and, thirdly, the Bolsheviks, including the Jewish Bund. The creed of these Bolsheviks, according to the lecturer, is, briefly, that the proletariat of all countries are nothing but gelatinous masses, which, if the Intelligentsia were destroyed in each country, would leave these masses at the mercy of the Jews." (The Cause of World Unrest (1920), Gerard Shelley, pp. 136-137; The Rulers of Russia, Denis Fahey, p. 37-38).

N.H. Webster, Secret Societies and Subversive Movements, p. 342
"We have only to look around us in the world today, to see everywhere the same disintegrating power at work, in art, literature, the drama, the daily Press, in every sphere that can influence the mind of the public...our modern cinemas perpetually endeavor to stir up class hatred by scenes and phrases showing 'the injustice of Kings,' 'the sufferings of the people,' 'the Selfishness of Aristocrats,' regardless of whether these enter into the theme of the narrative or not. And in the realms of literature, not merely in works of fiction but in manuals for schools, in histories and books professing to be of serious educative value and receiving a skillfully organized boom throughout the press, everything is done to weaken patriotism, to shake belief in all existing institutions by the systematic perversion of both contemporary and historical facts. I do not believe that all this is accidental; I do not believe that the public asks for the anti-patriotic to demoralizing books and plays placed before it; on the contrary it invariably responds to an appeal to patriotism and simple healthy emotions. The heart of the people is still sound, but ceaseless efforts are made to corrupt it." (N.H. Webster, Secret Societies and Subversive Movements, p. 342; The Secret Powers Behind Revolution, by Vicomte Leon De Poncins, pp. 180-181)

Marcus Eli Ravage in Century Magazine, 1928
"You {non-Jews} resent us {Jews}, but you cannot clearly say why...Not so many years ago I used to hear that we were money-grubbers and commercial materialists; now the complaint is being whispered around that no art and no profession is safe from Jewish invasion...
We shirk our patriotic duty in war time because we are pacifists by nature and tradition, and we are the Arch-Plotters of Universal Wars and the Chief Beneficiaries of those wars. We are at once the founders and leading adherents of capitalism and the chief perpetrators of the rebellion against capitalism. Surely, history has nothing like us for versatility!...

You accuse us of stirring up revolution in Moscow. Suppose we admit the charge. What of it?...You make much noise and fury about undue Jewish influence in your theaters and movie palaces. Very good; granted your complaint is well founded. But what is that compared to our staggering influence in your churches, schools, your laws and your government, and the very thoughts you think every day?...'The Protocols of the Elders of Zion' which shows that we plotted to bring on the late World War. You believe that book. All right...we will underwrite every word of it. It is genuine and authentic. But what is that besides the unquestionable historical conspiracy which we have carried out, which we never have denied because you never had the courage to charge us with it, and of which the full record is extant for anybody to read?

If you really are serious when you talk of Jewish plots, may I not direct your attention to one worth talking about? What use is it wasting words on the alleged control of your public opinion by Jewish financiers, newspaper owners, and movie magnates, when you might as well also justly accuse us of the proved control of your whole civilization...

You have not begun to appreciate the real depth of our guilt. We are intruders. We are subverters. We have taken your natural world, your ideals, your destiny, and have played havoc with them. We {Jews} have been at the bottom of not merely of the latest war {WWI} but of nearly all your wars, not only of the Russian but of every other major revolution in your history. We have brought discord and confusion and frustration into your personal and public life. We are still doing it. No one can tell how long we shall go on doing it...Who knows what great and glorious destiny might have been yours if we had left you alone.

But we did not leave you alone. We took you in hand and pulled down the beautiful and generous structure you had reared, and changed the whole course of your history. We conquered you as no empire of yours ever subjugated Africa or Asia. And we did it solely by the irresistible might of our spirit, with ideas, with propaganda...

Take the three principal revolutions in modern times, the French, the American and Russian. What are they but the triumph of the Jewish idea of social, political and economic justice? And the end is still a long way off. We still dominate you...
Is it any wonder you resent us? We have put a clog upon your progress. We have imposed upon you an alien book {Scofield Bible} and alien faith {Judeo-Christianity, a false Christianity} which is at cross-purposes with your native spirit, which keeps you everlastingly ill-at-ease, and which you lack the spirit either to reject or to accept in full...We have merely divided your soul, confused your impulses, paralyzed your desires...

So why should you not resent us? If we were in your place we should probably dislike you more cordially than you do us. But we should make no bones about telling you why...You Christians worry and complain about the Jew's influence in your civilization. We are, you say, an international people, a compact minority in your midst, with traditions, interests, aspirations and objectives distinct from your own. And you declare that this state of affairs is a measure of your orderly development; it muddles your destiny. I do not altogether see the danger. Your world has always been ruled by minorities; and it seems to me a matter of indifference what remote origin and professed creed of the governing clique is. The influence, on the other hand, is certainly there, and it is vastly greater and more insidious than you appear to realize...

That is what puzzles and amuses and sometimes exasperates us about your game of Jew-baiting. It sounds so portentous. You go about whispering terrifyingly of the hand of the Jew in this and that and the other thing. It makes us quake. We are conscious of the injury we did when we imposed upon you our alien faith and traditions. And then you specify and talk vaguely of Jewish financiers and Jewish motion picture promoters, and our terror dissolves in laughter. The Gentiles, we see with relief, will never know the real blackness of our crimes...

You call us subversive, agitators, revolution mongers. It is the truth, and I cower at your discovery...We undoubtedly had a sizable finger in the Lutheran Rebellion, and it is simply a fact that we were the prime movers in the Bourgeois Democratic Revolutions of the century before last, both in France and America. If we were not, we did not know our own interests. The Republican revolutions of the 18th Century freed us of our age-long political and social disabilities. They benefited us...You go on rattling of Jewish conspiracies and cite as instances the Great War and the Russian Revolution! Can you wonder that we Jews have always taken your anti-Semites rather lightly, as long as they did not resort to violence?" (Marcus Eli Ravage (Big Destruction Hammer of God), member of the staff of the New York Tribune, "A Real Case Against the Jews," in Century Magazine, January-February, 1928).

John Swinton, Former Chief of The New York Times
"We know the powers that are defying the people...Our Government is in the hands of pirates. All the power of politics, and of Congress, and of the administration is under the control of the moneyed interests...The adversary has the force of capital, thousands of millions of which are in his hand...He will grasp the knife of law, which he has so often wielded in his interest. He will lay hold of his forces in the legislature. He will make use of his forces in the press, which are always waiting for the wink, which is as good as a nod to a blind horse... Political rings are managed by skillful and unscrupulous political gamblers, who possess the 'machine' by which the populace are at once controlled and crushed." (John Swinton, Former Chief of The New York Times, in his book, A Momentous Question: The Respective Attitudes of Labor and Capital)

CHRISTEA, PATRIARCH. 20th century Romanian prelate.
"The Jews have caused an epidemic of corruption and social unrest. They monopolize the press, which, with foreign help, flays all the spiritual treasures of the Romanians. To defend ourselves is a national and patriotic duty - not anti-Semitism. Lack of measures to get rid of the plague would indicate that we are lazy cowards who let ourselves be carried alive to our graves. Why should we not get rid of these parasites who suck Romanian and Christian blood? It is logical and holy to react against them." (New York Herald Tribune, August 17, 1937)

Obviously CUNTICA should be flushed down a toilet.

But on usenet we should write of things more political and important:

Here are quotes from a speech delivered by Dr. Joseph Goebbels at the National Socialist Party Congress, Nuernberg, 1937.

"'Spain represents the world at the cross-roads.' Thus wrote the Bolshevic press organ, Die Rundschau, in its issue dated July 22, 1937. That one sentance precisely defines the international significance of the Spanish problem. It states exactly what the Spanish problem is. Here the final decision must lie either with Bolshevism or the principle of Authority. On the one side stands ruinous anarchy and, on the other, orderly constructive development."

"Nations which in recent years have kept their eyes closed to the startling growth of the international Bolshevic menace will one day experience a terrible awakening from this moral narcosis. The fact that we, German National Socialists, as conscious and uncompromising protaganists against the Bolshevic world-front, are still condemned to play the part of a preacher in the wilderness, calling out to deaf ears--this cannot prevent us from seeing things as they are and calling them by their right names. For if the constantly increasing extension of this Bolshevic infection in Europe should cause still greater disaster, then future historians will be in a position to record the fact that we, German National Socialists, were not among those who allowed themselves to be led astray in the universal chaos of thought and mental fog purposely created as a sort of smoke-screen by an insidious epidemic of political propaganda. Nothing could make us deviate in the least from the straight road we have taken.
"From the very nature of the case it is obvious that the subversive forces of International Jewry will raise a tumult of rage when we clearly and dispassionately lay bare the background of this revolutionary developement which is extending through the world. For, after all, they are the only people who are drawing profit forn the chaotic ruin which Bolshevism is bringing upon mankind. That on this account they will swamp us with a torrrent of abuse and lies and calumnies is only an honour for us and a further proof that we are right in warning Europe against this peril."

"The fight which General Franco is waging, with the support of all the constructive elements, against the Bolshevic menace to his native land is at the same time a fight for civilization."

"The Moscow Comintern never tires of impressing on public opinion thoughout the world the theory that the national movement, which on July 17, 1936, intervened in the seething developements in Spain, was a military rising oragnised by reactionary generals and that this rising was definately repudiated by the Spanish people. The truth however is that this national movement was in reality an act of self-defence on the part of the people, against the revolt which had been planned by the Spanish Communist Party for that time and was subsequently postponed to August 1936. This communist revolt had been planned in Moscow several years previously, organized from Moscow and directed from Moscow, and is still being carried out in practice from Moscow today."

"In 1935 the annual funds which Moscow contributed for the support of the Communist Party in Spain totalled several million pesetas, of which two millions were officially acknowledged as having been paid by the Comintern itself. At the 7th World Congress of the Comintern in Moscow, in 1935, Dimitroff gave instructions for the formation of a Front Populaire in Spain. Between February 16 and April 19,1936, 140 people were murdered by gangs of red revolutionaries, and 529 buildings were burned down and destroyed before the Bolshevic Revolution officially broke out."

"We can account for this baffling style of mutual admiration between Bolshevism and Western Liberalist Intellectualism only if we assume it to be some form of mental disease."

"During February and March 101 Russian Soviet aeroplanes were shipped from Reval to Spain. And on March 1st, 50 heavy guns from Soviet Russia were brought overland to Almansa. Recently one single large consignment of was material from Soviet Russia to the Reds in Spain included 100 heavy tanks, 500 medium-sized tanks, 2000 light tanks, 4000 heavy machine guns, 6000 light machine guns and 300 aeroplanes, with their pilots."

"I shall now deal with some instances which will help to give an idea of the extent to which World Liberalism goes in its moral support of the Reds in Spain. I have already emphasized the fact that the marriage between Bolshevism and Democracy presents some uncanny features; indeed one might call them downright perverse. In the historical developement of its activities Democracy has more and more become the political facade of World Capitalism. Bolshevism now carries the democratic principle to its ultimate logical application. We may call it the Democracy of Terror. It increases the pace of that sanguinary and pitiless developement of which Liberalism had already mapped out the path. I might illustrate this point by a rather drastic comparison. In democracy leading heads were out-voted by the counting of heads. In Bolshevism the same result is obtained by chopping off heads with the guillotine. The result in both cases is the same. The heads are wanting. The masses are robbed of their natural leaders and left prey to international Jews, who are now free to exercise their dictatorship by the employment of terrorization and money."

"Pleasing catchwords were used to win the favour of the workers but when the communist leaders came into power social terror became the rule of the day. Among the workers and peasant classes hunger prevailed, as symbol and sign of the Bolshevic rule."

"In keeping with the Soviet Russian pettern, family life and the instituton of marriage are being ruined by this world plague. Degradation of married women, the socialization of women, the martyrdom of children--these are the principles which are in vogue here."

"According to the 'Daily Mail' of August 22, 1936, Twenty-eight nuns from the convent of Santa Clara "were subjected to inconceivable tortures by relays of red maniacs."

"But Bolshevism in practice is nothing better than the most frightful find of barbarism. It is the outward expression of the hatred of the underworld agianst all those who are representative of Western civilization and a cultural level to which Bolshevism can never hope to attain."

"Among the 20,000 churches and monasteries which the Reds have plundered and destroyed many were of historical and architectual significance which cannot be replaced."

"But the churches of the world remain passive to it all and do not seem to have the least suspicion as to the deadly menace that threatens them. This is where Bolshevism shows itself again as the incarnation of evil. Its destructive influence on the popular religious instinct goes to the very roots of that instinct itself. And this ruthless atheistic campaign spares nothing whatsoever which might serve to remind the people of God and religion. The one fact alone that the Fuerer has saved the German churches from this fate should be enough to make them feel bound to remain eternally thankful to him. But instead of this they never tire of going beyond the sphere of their religious duties, interfering in political matters and making their influence felt in a way that has no connection whatsoever with their duties or their divine calling."

"According to indisputable figures based exclusively on Bolshevic statistics, 42,000 priests have been murdered in Russia. Up to February 2,1937, approximately 17,000 priests and monks and eleven bishops were murdered in Spain."

"A Swedish refugee stated, on November 10, 1936: 'I have seen churches on the walls of which the murdered bodies of women were hung, nuns that had been beheaded or burned and whose bodies had been nailed in rows to the church walls."

"The Strassburg paper, 'Der Elsasser', in its issue of February 27, 1937 published the staggering fact that '50,000 Spanish children are at the present moment wandering through Spanish provinces, abandoned and in rags. All public activities for the welfare of the youth have been abolished. And so the youngsters, very often no more than four or five years old, are left no alternative. They stagger along the road in swarms, shivering with cold and are nothing more than wandering skeletons.'"

"One shudders to think what might happen to humanity if this system became universal throughout the world."

"Bolshevism and its 'friendly press' throughout the world lose no opportunity of pointing an accusing finger at the alleged use of terror in countries which are governed according to the principles of authority. The whole world gives a cry of agonizing sympathy when, for example, a Jew in Germany receives a well-earned box on the ears. But what is this when compared with the terror that disrupts whole nations"

"Lenin himself, when asked at the 12th Congress of the Red Party, what were the principles on which Communism relied, answered: 'Murder, destruction, not a stone to be left in place if its removal should be to the advantage of the Revolution.'"

"The Jewish Soviet Ambassador in London finds it convenient to express his moral indignation before the Non-Intervention Committee in London. The world and the League of Nations are hypocritically appealed to. Before these tribunals the Jew Litwinow-Finkelstein plays the part of the civilised philistine and fills Europe with cries of protest."

"The Intenational Brigades which are sent into action on the Red Spanish front are commanded by Soviet officers. Their commander was the Jew, General Kleber."

"We shall not be deterred from pointing to the Jew as the inspirer, the instigator and the beneficiary of the dreadful catastrophe."

"At Barcelona he sits, in the person of Wladimer Bischitzki as director of the international oragnization for the smuggling of arms and munitions, comrades Lurje and Fuchs, of his own racial breed, sitting by his side. His Paris agents are his racial compatriots, Fratkin, Rosenfeld and Schapiro. At Hirtenberg in Austria their collaborator is the Jew, Mandl. In Amsterdam the Jew, Wolf. In Rotteerdam the Jews, Cohen, Gruenfeld, Kirsch, and Simon. In Denmark the Jew, Moses Israel Diamant. In Prague the Jews, Kindler, Kahn, Abter and Hithner. We know them all and we know them well."

"The fact that Western Liberalism closes its eyes to this evil portent is only a sign of its almost childish naivety."

"A struggle for native land and liberty, for honour and family and God and religion, for wife and child, for school and upbringing, for order, moral principle, culture and civilization, for our lives and our daily bread , has begun. In Germany it has already been brought to a triumphant issue."

I hear Fly, but only a carrier with weak modulation, at any time.

I may have to break down and try a Wellbrook. If that does not work, I'm out of ideas.

Hope your noise issue is resolved rapidamente!

"HD Radio Not High Definition"

"Despite iBiquity’s claims of improved sound quality and transmission, there have been numerous complaints about HD Radio from not only the radio industry but also consumers... Automakers are aware of the complaints associated with HD Radio. For example, in 2007, BMW released a Service Information Bulletin describing the problems associated with HD Radio, but noted that there was no retrofit kit or procedure available. The attorneys at Keefe Bartels are continuing their investigation into HD Radio and whether consumers are being forced to purchase technology that does not work as claimed. If you have experienced problems with your factory-installed HD radio receiver, we are interested in speaking to you."

"HD Car Radio Investigation"

"Consumer statutes and laws protect the purchasers of various products such as HD car radios. A party may be legally liable for statements, omissions or misrepresentations of material facts that should have been know to be false or misleading and promoted the sale of the product. Such laws protect innocent consumers from unlawful and deceptive practices. The victims of questionable business practices by parties such automobile manufacturers are the consumers who purchase or lease cars with HD car radios at significantly increased costs when these devices fail to function as they are represented to work. As news develops and the investigation proceeds, Keefe Bartels, LLC will carefully monitor events and research all relevant laws."

Plaintiff law firms that specialize in class action suits typically trawl for groups of people with a common complaint about a particular service or product. In this case, attorneys from Keefe Bartels seem be homing in on Web forum posts about poor performance from HD Radios included in high-end BMW and Jaguar OEM audio packages.

IBOC - iBiquity Finally Under Investigation
-LMFAO-Lawsuit Most Likely Going Nowhere

Most likely this will go no-where, no-how & no-ways for the following reasons :

1 - The Car Owners bought their Cars from Car Dealers.

2 - The Car Dealers bought their Cars from the Auto Manufacturers.

3 - The Auto Manufactures bought their HD-Radios from the OEM HD-Radio Manufacturers.

4 - It is the individual OEM HD- Radio Manufacturers that in-fact built the Radios to accomplish the IBOC

Specification that was Developed by iBiquity Corp.

5 - iBiquity Corp. Developed the IBOC Specification which gained Technical Approval of the FCC.

Conclusion : Most likely it is the OEM HD-Radio Manufacturers that will bear the brunt of any Lawsuit as to whether their Equipment actually 'conforms' to the IBOC Specification that was Developed by iBiquity Corp.

Oops ! - Every Radio that I ever bought never came with a Guarantee of 100% Radio Reception be it :
Analog AM/MW -or- Analog FM -or- Analog Shortwave.

For That Matter - I Do NOT Recall iBiquity Corp. touting
IBOC HD-Radio as being perfect and providing 100%
Radio Reception at all times; in all locations.

Also - I Do NOT Recall that the FCC in it's Technical Approval of IBOC HD-Radio making any claims that IBOC was perfect and would provide 100% Radio Reception at all times; in all locations. Hey I don't even recall the FCC making that claim for Analog AM/MW and FM Radios and the old tried and true Analog AM & FM Broadcast Systems.

Lastly the Technical Aspects of IBOC imply that there will NOT be 100% Radio Reception : with a Preferred {Primary} Digital Mode dropping back to the old standard Analog {Secondary} Mode
-if- the Digital Signal can not be received due to your location. Oops a lot of the time when this happens the Analog Signal can not be receive Simply because of your Location. Hey may be

Now remember I have Praised and Bashed IBOC

Digital Signal; with an increase to 4%~10%
Digital Signal LeveI : I do expect that IBOC

"HD Radio Not High Definition"

HD radio parallels HDTV in that if you transmit more than one program stream on an RF channel the quality of each sub-channel lowers.

HDTV advancements in MPEG2 encoding and a healthy 19MBits make multicasting bearable.

FM-HD radio at best has 96kBits which is slightly better than average FM and much worse when you carve that pie up. And the fun part starts when your favorite stations multicasts and clean analog blends to cheap internet quality and you can't change back.

AM-HD is a joke that reminds people how bad things were when the internet was only available via dial-up. Believe me, there is audio that sounds worse than analog AM.

Not to mention your digital carriers can be jammed by first-adjacent stations (93.7 by 93.9 & 93.5 and 640 by 650 & 630) and DRM becomes a much better idea.

There, I feel much better. The above is as was always IMHO so YMMV.

"A completely predictable development...unless you still wear rose-colored glasses with an HD receiver built into the frames. Anyone who has sold cars for more than five minutes could have told anyone who would listen that saddling high-end buyers with ANY piece of the car that isn't 100% results in a high-end buyer who will be looking elsewhere next time. In this case the problem is compounded because not only do you have radios whose owners will perceive "this doesn't work," but you also have the warranty-replacement radios not working either, because the issues are with the system design and not the execution. Those who take the time to complain will only be placated with a non-HD radio, and as soon as those types of warranty work hit critical mass, kiss HD goodbye in high-end cars."

Law Firm 'Investigates' HD Radio

September 1, 2010: A New Jersey personal injury law firm may be hovering around a class action lawsuit related to HD Radio, as it says it is "investigating" the technology and wants to hear from people who have had problems with factory-installed HD in cars. Keefe Bartels says there have been "numerous complaints about HD Radio from not only the radio industry but also consumers."

Among the complaints cited on the law firm's website are receivers switching from HD to analog and an associated "echo sound," "crackling or static sound when HD Radio is inactive," "insufficient numbers of HD Radio stations," "loss of signal while driving in valleys or between high buildings," signal disruption in different environmental conditions, and interference with adjacent channels.

The law firm notes that HD doesn't stand for "high definition " and says developer iBiquity "likely uses the 'HD' as a marketing device based upon consumers' understanding and ever-increasing desire for HD television."

It also names the automakers that are factory installing HD Radio.

The law firm says on its website, "The attorneys at Keefe Bartels are continuing their investigation into HD Radio and whether consumers are being forced to purchase technology that does not work as claimed. If you have experienced problems with your factory-installed HD radio receiver, we are interested in speaking to you."

Back to the '30s: how the GOP uses Nazi techniques to rally the mob
December 10, 2009

Instead of Der Angriff and the Völkischer Beobachter we have FOX News and World Net Daily. Instead of Joseph Goebbels and Alfred Rosenberg we have Rupert Murdoch and Joseph Farah. These media outlets spout anti- liberalism as vociferously and viciously as any NSDAP propa ganda organ. Like the party ideologues noted above, they employ ad hominem attacks in place of cogent analysis and prefer name- calling to actual news.
Murdoch, Farah and their minions take street- fighting techniques in front of minions through use of glossy modern technology.
Witness, for example, Glenn Beck and Rush Limbaugh went on the attacked Sen. Mary Landrieu (D- LA) for her stance on the healthcare debate in the Senate. But they did not critique her position based on its merits, and by offering a cogent counter- argument. Instead, both called a female US senator a prostitute (The Rush Limbaugh Show November 23 2009 and The Glenn Beck Program November 23,2009).
This sort of attack is commonplace and differs not at all from the tactics used by the National Socialist Press in the 20's and 30's.
• Glenn Beck listed people he'd like to "beat to death with a shovel." In 2001, Beck enumerated the various people that he "would want to kill with a shovel," or "line up" and "shoot … in the head," including Rep. Charles Rangel (D- NY). (Glenn Beck Program, 3/ 9/ 01)
• The Republican Tea- Party mobs embrace this principle. Ideo logical rhetoric backs it up: We see for example from Ann Coulter, Vester: You say you'd rather not talk to liberals at all? Coulter:
I think a baseball bat is the most effective way these days. (FOX News Channel, DaySide with Linda Vester, 10/ 6)
• "Would you kill someone for that?…I'm thinking about killing Michael Moore…I could kill him myself, or if I would need to hire some body to do it,… No, I think I could. I think he could be looking me in the eye, you know, and I could just be choking the life out. Is this wrong? I stopped wearing my What Would Jesus — band — Do, and I've lost all sense of right and wrong now. I used to be able to say, 'Yeah, I'd kill Michael Moore,' and then I'd see the little band: What Would Jesus Do? And then I'd realize, 'Oh, you wouldn't kill Michael Moore. Or at least you wouldn't choke him to death.' And you know, well, I'm not sure." (Glenn Beck Program, 5/ 17/ 05)

• Beck, joking about poisoning Nancy Pelosi: "So, Speaker Pelosi, I just wanted to — you gonna drink your wine? Are you blind? Do those eyes not work? There you — I want you to drink it now. Drink it. Drink it. Drink it… By the way, I put poison in your —" (Glenn Beck Pro gram, 8/ 6/ 09)
• Bill O'Reilly, of people who criticize him, The Radio Factor, September 27, 2007: "You know, look, if I could strangle these peo ple and not go to hell and get executed, I would, but I can't."
• Bill O'Reilly — radio show, Sept. 14, 2005: "I just wish Katrina had only hit the United Nations building, nothing else, just had flooded them out, and I wouldn't have rescued them."
• Rush Limbaugh October 20, 2009, The Rush Limbaugh Show: "This guy from The New York Times, if he really thinks that humanity is destroying the planet, humanity is destroying the climate, that human beings in their natural existence are going to cause the extinction of life on Earth — Andrew Revkin. Mr. Revkin, why don't you just go kill yourself and help the planet by dying?"
• Right Wing blogger Roger Erickson March 31, 2009: "At what point do the people tell the politicians to go to hell? At what point do they get off the couch, march down to their state legislator's house, pull him outside, and beat him to a bloody pulp for being an idiot?"

Part 2: Liberal/Jewish Media and Right Wing Propaganda. This is the second installment of a detailed examination of the parallels between the Nazi movement in Germany and the new Republican methodology since the election of Obama. Also see parts 1, 3, 4, and 5.

Now that we've examined the street-level thuggery in Part One, let's look at some examples of how the Republican "elite" work.

NSDAP and GOP: Two Medias; One Tactic
Everyone is familiar by now with the Right-wing rhetoric concerning the "liberal media elite." Personal responsibility goes right out the window if you can just blame the other guy for lying about you. Again we see a striking similarity between the National Socialists and the Republicans – fix blame, and then accuse them of controlling the media. The two seem to go hand-in-hand.
"Barack Obama only won because the media favored him and unfairly denigrated the abilities and accomplishments of John McCain and Sarah Palin." We've heard this before, of course. It probably won't surprise you to know where:
Hitler, July 5, 1942, "New agencies all the world over…are for the most part in the hands of Jews."1
If you substitute "liberal" for "Jew" you have the same language. Again, the liberals, like the Jews, are guilty of "fabrications":
Sarah Palin, June 3, 2009, Anchorage: Palin spoke of "the entrenched

bureaucrats and the elite self-proclaimed intellectuals, and the smug lobbyists who dominate Washington, and the liberal media that is imposing its will on Washington, embracing that status quo, that business as usual…" 2
This is the same language Hitler used of the "Jewish intellectuals" and communists who dominated Weimar government. As an aside, she was displaying typical intellectual dishonesty by lifting much of her speech from "an article written four years ago by Newt Gingrich and Craig Shirley without attribution."3
The Conservapedia echoes Hitler: "The Liberal media elite is the clique of highly paid, left-leaning executives and journalists who directly control most output of the main newspapers and broadcasting organizations."4
The media is in the hands of the Jews (communists)! The media is in the hands of the liberals (communists)! I don't have to make this stuff up. This is like shooting ducks in a pond or fishing with a hand grenade.
If that is not enough, surely you remember the Nazi (mis)use of the press. The National Socialist media became an outlet not for news, but for propaganda. There is the most famous newspaper owner of all, Joseph Goebbels and his paper Der Angriff (The Attack – aptly named). Then there is the Völkischer Beobachter (Folkish [Ethnic] Observer) edited first by Dietrich Eckart, an infamous "Jew-baiter", then by crank-ideologist Alfred Rosenberg.

Today, media has moved on to television and the Internet. Instead of Der Angriff and the Völkischer Beobachter we have FOX News and World Net Daily. Instead of Joseph Goebbels and Alfred Rosenberg we have Rupert Murdoch and Joseph Farah. These media outlets spout anti-liberalism as vociferously and viciously as any NSDAP propaganda organ. Like the party ideologues noted above, they employ ad hominem attacks in place of cogent analysis and prefer name-calling to actual news.
Murdoch, Farah and their minions take street-fighting techniques in front of minions through use of glossy modern technology.
Witness, for example, Glenn Beck and Rush Limbaugh went on the attacked Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-LA) for her stance on the healthcare debate in the Senate. But they did not critique her position based on its merits, and by offering a cogent counter-argument. Instead, both called a female US senator a prostitute (The Rush Limbaugh Show November 23 2009 and The Glenn Beck Program November 23,2009).
This sort of attack is commonplace and differs not at all from the tactics used by the National Socialist Press in the 20's and 30's. Vilification is the order of the day. Analysis of the facts, when it takes place at all, comes in a distant second. As Media Matters for America reports, Under its president, Roger Ailes, Fox News routinely employs racially charged appeals to foment opposition to the Obama administration and other progressive figures, such as Glenn Beck's comments that President Obama is a "racist" and "has a deep-seated hatred for white people or the white culture." Before launching the Fox News Channel, Ailes worked as a media consultant for several Republican campaigns where evidence shows he similarly appealed to racial fears and biases for political gain, and as executive producer for Rush Limbaugh's television show, during which Limbaugh made several controversial statements.5

And of course, just as National Socialist ideologues and leaders motivated the mob, so do Republican ideologues. As I noted above, Republican objections are not generally issued as cogent and well-thought-out rebuttals of liberal positions but as ad hominem attacks, character assassinations, and even suggested violence. This is true not only of the rank-and-file but of the leadership, the party ideologues, as can be seen from the examples below.

• Glenn Beck listed people he'd like to "beat to death with a shovel." In 2001, Beck enumerated the various people that he "would want to kill with a shovel," or "line up" and "shoot … in the head," including Rep. Charles Rangel (D-NY). (Glenn Beck Program, 3/9/01)

• The Republican Tea-Party mobs embrace this principle. Ideological rhetoric backs it up: We see for example from Ann Coulter, Vester: You say you'd rather not talk to liberals at all? Coulter: I think a baseball bat is the most effective way these days. (FOX News Channel, DaySide with Linda Vester, 10/6)

• "Would you kill someone for that?…I'm thinking about killing Michael Moore…I could kill him myself, or if I would need to hire somebody to do it,… No, I think I could. I think he could be looking me in the eye, you know, and I could just be choking the life out. Is this wrong? I stopped wearing my What Would Jesus — band — Do, and I've lost all sense of right and wrong now. I used to be able to say, 'Yeah, I'd kill Michael Moore,' and then I'd see the little band: What Would Jesus Do? And then I'd realize, 'Oh, you wouldn't kill Michael Moore. Or at least you wouldn't choke him to death.' And you know, well, I'm not sure." (Glenn Beck Program, 5/17/05)

• Beck, joking about poisoning Nancy Pelosi: "So, Speaker Pelosi, I just wanted to — you gonna drink your wine? Are you blind? Do those eyes not work? There you — I want you to drink it now. Drink it. Drink it. Drink it… By the way, I put poison in your —" (Glenn Beck Program, 8/6/09)

• Bill O'Reilly, of people who criticize him, The Radio Factor, September 27, 2007: "You know, look, if I could strangle these people and not go to hell and get executed, I would, but I can't."

• Bill O'Reilly - radio show, Sept. 14, 2005: "I just wish Katrina had only hit the United Nations building, nothing else, just had flooded them out, and I wouldn't have rescued them."

• Rush Limbaugh October 20, 2009, The Rush Limbaugh Show: "This guy from The New York Times, if he really thinks that humanity is destroying the planet, humanity is destroying the climate, that human beings in their natural existence are going to cause the extinction of life on Earth — Andrew Revkin. Mr. Revkin, why don't you just go kill yourself and help the planet by dying?”

• Right Wing blogger Roger Erickson March 31, 2009: “At what point do the people tell the politicians to go to hell? At what point do they get off the couch, march down to their state legislator’s house, pull him outside, and beat him to a bloody pulp for being an idiot?”

Back to the '30s: how the GOP uses Nazi techniques to rally the mob

Instead of Der Angriff and the Völkischer Beobachter we have FOX News and World Net Daily. Instead of Joseph Goebbels and Alfred Rosenberg we have Rupert Murdoch and Joseph Farah. These media outlets spout anti- liberalism as vociferously and viciously as any NSDAP propa ganda organ. Like the party ideologues noted above, they employ ad hominem attacks in place of cogent analysis and prefer name- calling to actual news.
Murdoch, Farah and their minions take street- fighting techniques in front of minions through use of glossy modern technology. Witness, for example, Glenn Beck and Rush Limbaugh went on the attacked Sen. Mary Landrieu (D- LA) for her stance on the healthcare debate in the Senate. But they did not critique her position based on its merits, and by offering a cogent counter- argument. • “Would you kill someone for that?…I’m thinking about killing Michael Moore…I could kill him myself, or if I would need to hire some body to do it,… No, I think I could. I think he could be looking me in the eye, you know, and I could just be choking the life out. Is this wrong? • Beck, joking about poisoning Nancy Pelosi: “So, Speaker Pelosi, I just wanted to — you gonna drink your wine? Are you blind? Do those eyes not work? There you — I want you to drink it now. Drink it. Drink it. Drink it… By the way, I put poison in your —” (Glenn Beck Pro gram, 8/ 6/ 09)
• Bill O’Reilly, of people who criticize him, The Radio Factor, September 27, 2007: “You know, look, if I could strangle these peo ple and not go to hell and get executed, I would, but I can’t.”

Part 2: Liberal/Jewish Media and Right Wing Propaganda. This is the second installment of a detailed examination of the parallels between the Nazi movement in Germany and the new Republican methodology since the election of Obama. Also see parts 1, 3, 4, and 5.

Now that we’ve examined the street-level thuggery in Part One, let’s look at some examples of how the Republican “elite” work.

NSDAP and GOP: Two Medias; One Tactic
Everyone is familiar by now with the Right-wing rhetoric concerning the “liberal media elite.” Personal responsibility goes right out the window if you can just blame the other guy for lying about you. Again we see a striking similarity between the National Socialists and the Republicans – fix blame, and then accuse them of controlling the media. The two seem to go hand-in-hand.
“Barack Obama only won because the media favored him and unfairly denigrated the abilities and accomplishments of John McCain and Sarah Palin.” We’ve heard this before, of course. It probably won’t surprise you to know where:

Hitler, July 5, 1942, “New agencies all the world over…are for the most part in the hands of Jews.”1
If you substitute “liberal” for “Jew” you have the same language. Again, the liberals, like the Jews, are guilty of “fabrications”:
Sarah Palin, June 3, 2009, Anchorage: Palin spoke of “the entrenched bureaucrats and the elite self-proclaimed intellectuals, and the smug lobbyists who dominate Washington, and the liberal media that is imposing its will on Washington, embracing that status quo, that business as usual…” 2
This is the same language Hitler used of the “Jewish intellectuals” and communists who dominated Weimar government. As an aside, she was displaying typical intellectual dishonesty by lifting much of her speech from “an article written four years ago by Newt Gingrich and Craig Shirley without attribution.”3
The Conservapedia echoes Hitler: “The Liberal media elite is the clique of highly paid, left-leaning executives and journalists who directly control most output of the main newspapers and broadcasting organizations.”4
The media is in the hands of the Jews (communists)! The media is in the hands of the liberals (communists)! I don’t have to make this stuff up. This is like shooting ducks in a pond or fishing with a hand grenade.
If that is not enough, surely you remember the Nazi (mis)use of the press. The National Socialist media became an outlet not for news, but for propaganda. There is the most famous newspaper owner of all, Joseph Goebbels and his paper Der Angriff (The Attack – aptly named). Then there is the Völkischer Beobachter (Folkish [Ethnic] Observer) edited first by Dietrich Eckart, an infamous “Jew-baiter”, then by crank-ideologist Alfred Rosenberg.

Today, media has moved on to television and the Internet. Instead of Der Angriff and the Völkischer Beobachter we have FOX News and World Net Daily. Instead of Joseph Goebbels and Alfred Rosenberg we have Rupert Murdoch and Joseph Farah. These media outlets spout anti-liberalism as vociferously and viciously as any NSDAP propaganda organ. Like the party ideologues noted above, they employ ad hominem attacks in place of cogent analysis and prefer name-calling to actual news.
Murdoch, Farah and their minions take street-fighting techniques in front of minions through use of glossy modern technology.

This sort of attack is commonplace and differs not at all from the tactics used by the National Socialist Press in the 20’s and 30’s.

Vilification is the order of the day. Analysis of the facts, when it takes place at all, comes in a distant second. As Media Matters for America reports,

Part 2: Liberal/Jewish Media and Right Wing Propaganda. This is the second installment of a detailed examination of the parallels between the Nazi movement in Germany and the new Republican methodology since the election of Obama. Also see parts 1, 3, 4, and 5.

Now that we've examined the street-level thuggery in Part One, let's look at some examples of how the Republican "elite" work.

NSDAP and GOP: Two Medias; One Tactic
Everyone is familiar by now with the Right-wing rhetoric concerning the "liberal media elite." Personal responsibility goes right out the window if you can just blame the other guy for lying about you. Again we see a striking similarity between the National Socialists and the Republicans – fix blame, and then accuse them of controlling the media. The two seem to go hand-in-hand.
"Barack Obama only won because the media favored him and unfairly denigrated the abilities and accomplishments of John McCain and Sarah Palin." We've heard this before, of course. It probably won't surprise you to know where:
Hitler, July 5, 1942, "New agencies all the world over…are for the most part in the hands of Jews."1
If you substitute "liberal" for "Jew" you have the same language. Again, the liberals, like the Jews, are guilty of "fabrications":
Sarah Palin, June 3, 2009, Anchorage: Palin spoke of "the entrenched

bureaucrats and the elite self-proclaimed intellectuals, and the smug lobbyists who dominate Washington, and the liberal media that is imposing its will on Washington, embracing that status quo, that business as usual…" 2
This is the same language Hitler used of the "Jewish intellectuals" and communists who dominated Weimar government. As an aside, she was displaying typical intellectual dishonesty by lifting much of her speech from "an article written four years ago by Newt Gingrich and Craig Shirley without attribution."3
The Conservapedia echoes Hitler: "The Liberal media elite is the clique of highly paid, left-leaning executives and journalists who directly control most output of the main newspapers and broadcasting organizations."4
The media is in the hands of the Jews (communists)! The media is in the hands of the liberals (communists)! I don't have to make this stuff up. This is like shooting ducks in a pond or fishing with a hand grenade.
If that is not enough, surely you remember the Nazi (mis)use of the press. The National Socialist media became an outlet not for news, but for propaganda. There is the most famous newspaper owner of all, Joseph Goebbels and his paper Der Angriff (The Attack – aptly named). Then there is the Völkischer Beobachter (Folkish [Ethnic] Observer) edited first by Dietrich Eckart, an infamous "Jew-baiter", then by crank-ideologist Alfred Rosenberg.

Today, media has moved on to television and the Internet. Instead of Der Angriff and the Völkischer Beobachter we have FOX News and World Net Daily. Instead of Joseph Goebbels and Alfred Rosenberg we have Rupert Murdoch and Joseph Farah. These media outlets spout anti-liberalism as vociferously and viciously as any NSDAP propaganda organ. Like the party ideologues noted above, they employ ad hominem attacks in place of cogent analysis and prefer name-calling to actual news.
Murdoch, Farah and their minions take street-fighting techniques in front of minions through use of glossy modern technology.
Witness, for example, Glenn Beck and Rush Limbaugh went on the attacked Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-LA) for her stance on the healthcare debate in the Senate. But they did not critique her position based on its merits, and by offering a cogent counter-argument. Instead, both called a female US senator a prostitute (The Rush Limbaugh Show November 23 2009 and The Glenn Beck Program November 23,2009).
This sort of attack is commonplace and differs not at all from the tactics used by the National Socialist Press in the 20's and 30's. Vilification is the order of the day. Analysis of the facts, when it takes place at all, comes in a distant second. As Media Matters for America reports, Under its president, Roger Ailes, Fox News routinely employs racially charged appeals to foment opposition to the Obama administration and other progressive figures, such as Glenn Beck's comments that President Obama is a "racist" and "has a deep-seated hatred for white people or the white culture." Before launching the Fox News Channel, Ailes worked as a media consultant for several Republican campaigns where evidence shows he similarly appealed to racial fears and biases for political gain, and as executive producer for Rush Limbaugh's television show, during which Limbaugh made several controversial statements.5

And of course, just as National Socialist ideologues and leaders motivated the mob, so do Republican ideologues. As I noted above, Republican objections are not generally issued as cogent and well-thought-out rebuttals of liberal positions but as ad hominem attacks, character assassinations, and even suggested violence. This is true not only of the rank-and-file but of the leadership, the party ideologues, as can be seen from the examples below.

• Glenn Beck listed people he'd like to "beat to death with a shovel." In 2001, Beck enumerated the various people that he "would want to kill with a shovel," or "line up" and "shoot … in the head," including Rep. Charles Rangel (D-NY). (Glenn Beck Program, 3/9/01)

• The Republican Tea-Party mobs embrace this principle. Ideological rhetoric backs it up: We see for example from Ann Coulter, Vester: You say you'd rather not talk to liberals at all? Coulter: I think a baseball bat is the most effective way these days. (FOX News Channel, DaySide with Linda Vester, 10/6)

• "Would you kill someone for that?…I'm thinking about killing Michael Moore…I could kill him myself, or if I would need to hire somebody to do it,… No, I think I could. I think he could be looking me in the eye, you know, and I could just be choking the life out. Is this wrong? I stopped wearing my What Would Jesus — band — Do, and I've lost all sense of right and wrong now. I used to be able to say, 'Yeah, I'd kill Michael Moore,' and then I'd see the little band: What Would Jesus Do? And then I'd realize, 'Oh, you wouldn't kill Michael Moore. Or at least you wouldn't choke him to death.' And you know, well, I'm not sure." (Glenn Beck Program, 5/17/05)

• Beck, joking about poisoning Nancy Pelosi: "So, Speaker Pelosi, I just wanted to — you gonna drink your wine? Are you blind? Do those eyes not work? There you — I want you to drink it now. Drink it. Drink it. Drink it… By the way, I put poison in your —" (Glenn Beck Program, 8/6/09)

• Bill O'Reilly, of people who criticize him, The Radio Factor, September 27, 2007: "You know, look, if I could strangle these people and not go to hell and get executed, I would, but I can't."

• Bill O'Reilly - radio show, Sept. 14, 2005: "I just wish Katrina had only hit the United Nations building, nothing else, just had flooded them out, and I wouldn't have rescued them."

Mr. Revkin, why don't you just go kill yourself and help the planet by dying?”

• Right Wing blogger Roger Erickson March 31, 2009: “At what point do the people tell the politicians to go to hell? At what point do they get off the couch, march down to their state legislator’s house, pull him outside, and beat him to a bloody pulp for being an idiot?”

.. ended up coming ashore very near to us. We got some fairly minor wind gusts, due to our local topography and being surrounded by taller buildings, but just 15km away, at Osan AB, there was a lot of damage: trees down, power out, etc. Seoul got nailed really bad: all above ground rail transportation is out of service, wide spread power outages, subways flooded, other buiding damage. Good thing we opted not to try to beat the storm to Seoul this morning. :-/

Palomar's currently sold 9:1 transformer is good only for a longwire, but not for T2FD. The one made by Welbrook is the right thing,however. I think. The RFsystems MLB is a nice one,however. Have been using it lately indoors(!) , in conjunction with a really heavy gauge wire of around 20 feet with fairly decent results. Have you tried disconnecting the ground connection in the sloper? Sometimes,the signal level goes up,mysteriously...

Roy, I use three poles mounted to the fence.Then the feed drops to the eves

- Top-fed slopers in an open space are essentially
- omnidirectional.

OK but most are 'in' close-in space with all sorts of things around them.

- Most of the radiation happens at the feed point.

Yes there is more power radiating around the feed-point.
-but- I a talking about a SWL Receiving Antenna.

- The slantwire and the support structure form a
- low Q mass that also radiates, equally well in
- all directions.

Not 'If' the Support Structure is a Grounded Metal Tower/Mast.

Many of the Commercial Slopers use an attached Counterpoise Insulated Wire to hang-down to the ground along the Side of a Building to act as the Grounded Tower/Mast {Reflector} to give the Sloper some directivity and to better 'Match' the Antenna to the Feed-in-Line.

http://t2k.wdfiles.com/local--files/shortwave-receiving-antennas/super-sloper-002.jpg

"A Sloper which is at an angle they will be more directional the direction that they are sloped."
http://www.angelfire.com/mb/amandx/dipole.html

Full 1/2 Wave Sloper Antenna : The radiation pattern will be almost omnidirectional ... with a slight advantage toward the "sloping" direction.

http://www.hamradiosecrets.com/ham-radio-hf-antenna.html

Half 1/4 Wave Sloper Antenna : Omni-Directional pattern, but with some "warping" in the direction of the wire slope.
http://mysite.ncnetwork.net/resvzazs/80endfed.htm

1/4 Wave Sloper : It does appear to offer gain in the direction of the sloping element.
http://home.centurytel.net/WD0M/antennas1.html

Some of this may be the fact that these Slopers are Mounted to Metal Towers/Masts and the Grounded Tower/Mast may be acting like a back Reflector and causing some of the Radiated Directivity from the Tower to the Sloping Wire and out away from them.

- Dale P. has always recommended using his PAR
- end-fed as a sloper with the feedpoint near the
- bottom and thus giving a nice short run to ground.
- Good omni results and a high radiation angle.
- I think this would work for me if I did not have such
- a battery of RFI generators around my home.

Someone else suggested a "V" Sloper with a near Ground Feed-Point and two extended Arms both Sloping-Up and Spreading-Apart. Using a Dipole 4:1 Matching Transformer. Pointing the Bottom of the "V" like the Tip of an Arrow in the Direction of the Target Zone : N-E-W-S ?

Sort of like 'reversing' {in-versing} the set-up of the Alpha Delta DX-Ultra Dipole Antenna : Center Down & Tips Up and Away
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/sw_ant/3377.html

The AD DX-U Dipole Antenna is 82 Feet Tip-to-Tip
-so- Each Arm would be 41 Feet Long
-but- Did not have any suggestion on the Elevation of the Tips or the Spread between the Tips.

For SWLing a 30 Degree Angle of Elevation {versus the HAM 45 Degrees} with a like Degree of Spread between the Arms.
* Bottom Feed-Point at One Foot (1')
* Tips Topped at 21.5 Feet
* Tips Spread at 20.5 Feet Ground Foot-Print under the Arms 36 Feet.
Ground Area ~380 Sq Ft = 21x36/2

Reading briefly through this thread, I'm not sure that he is Fed legally, unless he was making claims that HD radio provides good sound quality, but even then things get difficult when you try to actually prove that it doesn't.

HOWEVER. If this creates a lot of publicity about the problems of HD-Radio, ten perhaps HD-Radio sales will become even more Fed than they already are, which may be the beginning of the end for HD-Radio.

Wonder if that is part of the reason why we see so few cars over here with DAB fitted as standard.

On cheaper cars, it would be the extra cost that would put them off fitting DAB as standard. On high end cars presumably the cost is less of an issue, but then they are not going to want to fit something that sounds like sh*t in a high end car.

Well if it brings the general public's attention to the problem, then HD-Radio sales might end up even worse than they are today.

Perhaps if you are very very lucky, it may end up being a reason to drop HD-Radio, and develop a proper digital radio system.

In October 2001, following the World Trade Center attacks, New York mayor Rudy Giuliani turned down a $10 million donation from Al-Waleed for disaster relief after the prince suggested the United States "must address some of the issues that led to such a criminal attack," and "re-examine its policies in the Middle East." The point of the law firm is that aotomakers such as BMW know about the HD Radio problems (via a service bulletin issued in 2007), yet continue to sell this defective product as standard, driving up the cost of their automobiles. I also know a particular broadcaster, and others, that are getting involved over loss of ad revenue from IBLOCK interference, and stations that got duped by iBiquity's false claims. I hope this excalates into a full-blown investigation, and I can see other firms getting involved. It's not only involving consumers, but also broadcasters. This negative oublicity will inform and scare aware consumers, and any new automakers who were thinking about HD Radio - no way wil they position themselves into a potential lawsuit. This firm knows what they are doing, and it will be the begenning of the end for IBLOCK.

Against 'The Jews'

i do not idolize hitler, i am a liberal, we fought and destroyed a viral form of conservatism in europe in the 1940's.
these are your polices,
"And of course, just as National Socialist ideologues and leaders motivated the mob, so do Republican ideologues. As I noted above, Republican objections are not generally issued as cogent and well-thought-out rebuttals of liberal positions but as ad hominem attacks, character assassinations, and even suggested violence. This is true not only of the rank-and-file but of the leadership"

And you find Cuba to be a threat?? Why are Conservatives such pansies? Why are you afraid of a small island filled with very poor people that possesses no resources? As for the rest, bullshit. If we have anything to fear from the Russians or the Chinese, it stems from their capitalists and industrial bureaucrats not their residue of remaining communists. Dependence on foreign oil, something the Republicans and "Conservatives" adamantly refuse to do anything about, is a much clearer threat, economically and politically.

If they wanted to use the FM band, they may have been better off using DRM+.

Much more spectrally efficient.
Likely to provide better sound quality.
The only licensing requirement is for decoding of aac+.
Better control of which frequencies to use, hence more chance of avoiding interference to FM services.

Perhaps not. But if they are going to try and sell them to people, they could at least have tried selling then a descent system.

A lot of the thinking in manufacturing, today, is to release what are effectively 'betas' and let the warranty program cover problems.
Two advantages to doing it this way. One is that sales begin earlier than otherwise if a 'perfected' system be released on schedule. The other is that the beta test is real world, with warranty costs getting written off as R&D. Earliers sales, tax credits, earlier finished release product.

Chrysler has been doing things this way for a decade and a half.

Lotus has done it this way throughout most of its history.

ATT (Bell Labs) did a very great deal of research into this thinking, and found that the public will not, en masse, respond to new technology anyway. So the complaints about failure to live up to expectations will not hurt long term sales. Immediate release purchases will be then left up to innovators and early adoptors, whose priorities are "newness", and "purchase as soon as released".
They expect, and will work around, failures to perform as promised.

It doesn't always work. And failures tend to be spectacular.

But, the strategy works far more often than it doesn't. And even Apple uses it.

In the meantime, the mass will not be making a purchase until the product is perfected, and matured. So, an unidentified beta release for sale makes good business sense.

That said, the iBiquity system by design was fraught with liabilities. And while early adoptors and innovators did buy up early release receivers, the reasons for mass purchase by those interested in a mature product never did develop: ie, content.

If the content were there that would sell, these radios would fly off the shelves.

So, the current malaise of the Hybrid Digital system is two fold. One is that the system itself, technically speaking, fails to live up to its hype. The other is, that even when it does work there is no compelling reason fostering desire to use it.

By contrast--and I know I'm going to Hell for saying this,--DRM had fewer liabilities (huge QRM being one,) and offered positive and specific technical advantages over the analogue SW transmit-receive complex. Even in that, its offerings were not sufficient to drive uptake of the technology, and again, the content wasn't there.

What broadcasters and technology manufacturers fail to keep in mind, is that radio is about LISTENING. That means there has to be compelling CONTENT to drive a change in behaviour.

Too often, they simply rely on a change of technology alone.

IIRC, during a hurricane the FCC allows AM (MW) stations that normally reduce power and/or use a directional pattern at night to broadcast full omni-directional power. Thus, hurricanes can result in MW DX that you otherwise wouldn't hear. I'm not sure how far away from the hurricane this rule applies.

No idea of the distance, but I think it may be up to the station (within reason).

Others say he is a Communist (Athiest)

http://frontpagemag.com/2010/09/02/obama-is-not-a-muslim/

Being an atheist is pretty good cover for a muslim who has reason to practice deception. All muslims will lie to non-muslims without remorse. It is written in The Black Book of Communism, er, the Satanic Verses of the koran.

"Any one who, after accepting faith in Allah, utters Unbelief, except under compulsion, his heart remaining firm in Faith - but such as open their breast to Unbelief, on them is Wrath from Allah, and theirs will be a dreadful Penalty." Surah 16: 106

The noted Islamic commentator, Al-Tabary explained Surah 16:106 as a verse that had been revealed to Mohammed after he learned that Ammar Ibn Yasser was forced to deny his faith in Mohammed when kidnapped by the Banu Moghera tribe. Mohammed consoled Ammar by telling him, "If they turned, you turn." (Meaning: if they again capture you, you are allowed to deny me again.)

These and similar passages from the Quran clearly reveal that Muslims' unintentional lies are forgivable and that even their intentional lies can be absolved by performing extra duties. It is also clear that if forced to do so, Muslims can lie while under oath and can even falsely deny faith in Allah, as long as they maintain the profession of faith in their hearts.

The Jews Are Our Misfortune
By Dr. William Pierce

If you've been listening to many of my broadcasts you will know that the issue I talk about most often is that of media control. In nearly every broadcast I have pointed out that the people who control the mass media of news and entertainment are able to manipulate the opinions and attitudes of about 95 per cent of the population. I have pointed out that the media bosses do this manipulation deliberately and in collusion with one another, taking advantage of the compelling need most people have to conform their ideas and their behavior to a perceived norm.

The media bosses use their control over the mass media of entertainment -- and to a lesser extent over the news media -- to create an artificial norm that is presented to the public through television, motion pictures, advertising, and other media, and this artificial norm is the one perceived as real by most of the public. Through their control of public opinion the media bosses also control the democratic political process and governmental policy in a way that is advantageous to them and disadvantageous to the White public. And these media bosses are overwhelmingly Jews.

That has been the message I have presented over and over again in many of these broadcasts. I have talked about different facets of Jewish media control and have presented different specifics, different details, in various broadcasts. I've discussed a number of different Hollywood films or television shows as specific examples of the way in which the Jews use their media control to brainwash the public, to promote fashions and styles and behavior that are harmful to our people but that advance the long-term schemes of the Jews to further dominate and exploit our society.

(Some of this may be outdated today, but it still explains why things are the way they are)

I've talked about specific Jews who control various segments of the mass media, and I've pointed out specific instances of the destructive way in which they use their control. I've talked about the Jewish media boss Sumner Redstone and his control of MTV and CBS and the Hollywood film studio Paramount Pictures. I've talked about the Jewish media boss Michael Eisner and his control of the Disney Company and ABC. I've talked about the Jewish media boss Gerald Levin and his control of Time Warner and CNN. I've talked about the Jewish media boss Edgar Bronfman and his control of the largest segment of the popular music industry and Universal Studios in Hollywood. And I've talked about dozens of other Jewish media bosses and the media they control and the specific ways in which they use those media. In particular, during the past few months I've talked about several recent Hollywood films which deliberately target teenaged White girls and brainwash them with the notion that it is fashionable for them to have sex with Black males.

And of course, I've talked about the Jewish control of the news media as well as the entertainment media. In a way similar to their use of the entertainment media to set popular fashions, the Jewish media bosses distort and censor the news in order to give the public a distorted picture of what is happening in the world. I've given several very specific examples of this Jewish management of the news in recent months.

I've talked about the total blackout at the national level of the news of the atrocious rape and massacre of Whites in Wichita, Kansas, by Blacks last December, and I've talked about the almost total suppression of the news of the Black racial attacks on Whites in Seattle in the Mardi Gras riot at the end of February this year. I also talked about the downplaying of the racial aspects of the Black rioting in Cincinnati in April of this year, about the failure of the news media outside the immediate Cincinnati area to mention the deliberate targeting of Whites, especially White women, by the Black rioters. And I described the gross distortions in the news coverage of the racial politics in York, Pennsylvania, that led to the current White mayor of York being charged in May with the killing of a Black during a Black race riot in York 32 years ago.

I have pointed out repeatedly how all of this suppression of the news and distortion of the news is aimed at creating and maintaining a false picture in the public mind of racial conflict in the United States. In this false picture Whites always are the aggressors, Blacks or other non-Whites are the innocent victims, and the root of all racial conflict is White racism.

In a number of my broadcasts I've discussed at length why the Jews do what they do: why they use their media control in such a deceptive and destructive way, what their motives are. I've also talked about how they collaborate. I've pointed out that their propaganda policies are not formulated independently, but that they have a coherent party line that they all follow. I've given a number of specific examples of this. Well, all of these things that I've talked about have not gone unnoticed by the Jewish media bosses themselves. When people expose their activities or their scheming they pay attention. In particular, they have been paying attention to these American Dissident Voices broadcasts and to the work of my organization, the National Alliance. They read what's on our Web sites at natvan.com and natall.com and resistance.com, and they talk about it among themselves. This shows up pretty clearly in the uniform way in which their media respond to us. Whether it's the Associated Press or Time magazine or the Washington Post or a television news commentator anywhere in the United States, they always use the same phrasing in talking about us. They always use the word "hate" in referring to us. They always say that the National Alliance is the "most dangerous organized hate group" in America, despite the fact that all we do is disseminate to the public the truth about what they're doing. That's what they regard as "dangerous" and as "hate."

If you want to see a current indicator of the fact that they do think about us, go to the Web site promoting Steven Spielberg's new movie,A.I. There you'll see a parody of a part of the National Alliance's Web site in the form of a page headed "Who Is the Anti-Robot Militia?" It's obviously copied, almost word for word, from the page "Who Is the National Alliance?" on our Web site. It's difficult for me to understand what they hoped to accomplish with this parody. Perhaps they believe that it will make people take us less seriously.

Somewhat less quirky but much more directly deceptive are their standard smokescreen responses. It used to be that whenever I would raise the issue of Jewish monopoly control of the mass media of news and entertainment during an interview or on a call-in program, I would hear the response from a Jew or an apologist for the Jews: "What about Ted Turner? He's not a Jew," as if that negated everything I had said. Of course, that response was used before Ted Turner's CNN was taken over by the very Jewish Time Warner. And now that Ted Turner has been eased out of all decision-making positions in the cable news network he built and has been replaced by Jews, one doesn't hear the Ted Turner response any longer.

The standard responses today, the ones I hear as often as I used to hear the Ted Turner response, are the "it's the shareholders" and the "it's the big bankers." Whenever I start naming names -- whenever I begin talking about the control over the media wielded by Michael Eisner or Sumner Redstone, for example, a Jew will pop up with the response:
"Those guys don't control the media. It's the shareholders who control the media. Eisner and Redstone are just employees. The shareholders tell them what to do." A variation on this theme is, "Eisner and Redstone don't own the media. It's the big banks that own all of the media, and most of the big bankers are Gentiles."

Well, of course, that's not really true, and they know it's not true. The big Jewish media bosses are mostly quite autonomous. Sumner Redstone, for example, owns outright two-thirds of the shares in his media empire. His personal fortune is more than 12 billion dollars, according to Forbes magazine this month. I'm quite sure he doesn't check with any shareholders before he dreams up some new piece of race-mixing filth for MTV.

As for Gentile bankers telling the Jewish media bosses what kind of propaganda they must produce for the public, that's total nonsense. I haven't yet done a study of the investment banking industry to determine what percentage of Jews and what percentage of Gentiles are involved in it, but one thing that's certain is that the Gentile bankers would faint dead away at the thought of telling Jewish media bosses such as Michael Eisner or the Sulzberger family or the Newhouses or Sumner Redstone to cut back on the race-mixing propaganda. Gentile bankers as a class are rich, deracinated capons, whose only interest is money.

Every Jewish propaganda medium -- CBS or MTV or Time magazine or the New York Times -- is staffed from top to bottom with Jews, and they all know what they're doing. They work as a tribe, as a swarm of termites gnawing at the foundations of our existence. There is total agreement among the media Jews as to the general thrust of their propaganda. They may disagree on many of the details -- they may even compete against each other for a bigger slice of the media pie -- but all agree on the general goals of degrading and subverting Gentile civilization, of corrupting Gentile institutions, of mongrelizing our race. Again, the Jews work as a tribe, and that is the source of their strength and their success.

Gentile bankers, on the other hand, work only for themselves. They would not dream of combining and using their financial strength to protect our people from the Jews. They are terrified of the Jews, of the media. The more money they have, the more selfish and the more cowardly they are. The huge difference, the decisive difference, between the Jews and our people is that they work as a tribe, and we work as individuals. They work together, rich Jews and poor Jews, for their common tribal interests, against us, and until now we have failed to organize effectively to defend ourselves against them.

Anyway, my point is that their defense against my exposure of their activities and their power over our government is orchestrated - that is, they've all gotten together and decided what their defense will be -- and it's a deliberate lie. As I continue to expose the destructive activities of the Jewish media bosses, you will continue to hear them and their apologists respond that they really don't have any power, that it's the Gentile shareholders and the Gentile bankers who control the media. A lot of dimwits will believe that lie. A lot of couch potatoes, a lot of soccer moms, a lot of baseball fans, a lot of lemmings, will believe that it's not the Jew Sumner Redstone who deliberately uses MTV to corrupt White teenagers; instead it's some cabal of Gentile shareholders and Gentile bankers who tell him what to do, and Redstone is only an employee who follows their orders.

I think it's time for us to orchestrate our exposure of the Jewish media. I think it's about time for the public, lemmings and all, to begin hearing a uniform charge against them, a uniform statement of our opposition to them. How about this: The Jews are our misfortune. That's simple, and it's true, and it's easy to remember. Repeat after me: The Jews are our misfortune. Let's use that statement. Let's let everyone hear it. Let's impress it on everyone's consciousness: The Jews are our misfortune.

Of course, when I say the Jews are our misfortune, I'm not talking only about the Jewish media bosses. I'm not talking only about the Jews at the top, such as Sumner Redstone and the Sulzbergers and Michael Eisner and the others who formulate and direct the propaganda line against Gentile society; I'm talking about the whole tribe, and I believe that message comes across in the statement, the Jews are our misfortune. Let me tell you what the standard lemming response will be to that statement, the response that they have been taught and will parrot back.

First, from the religious lemmings it will be something like this: "Oh, no, the Jews aren't our misfortune, we owe everything to the Jews. Don't you know that Jesus was a Jew and God was his father? That makes God a Jew. We must do what the Jews tell us. They are God's people." I'm sure that argument is embarrassing to some of the more sophisticated apologists for the Jews, but many Christian Fundamentalists use it, and I've heard it often.

From the secular lemmings it will be more like: "Don't you know that Freud and Einstein and Salk were Jews? We wouldn't have a space program if it weren't for Einstein. We wouldn't have a cure for polio if it weren't for Salk. The Jews are our fortune, not our misfortune." Well, of course, our space program has practically nothing to do with Einstein or his Jewishness. Gentile thinkers envisioned it and pioneered both its theoretical basis and its practical development. The German theoretician, Hermann Oberth, and the Russian, Konstantin Tsiolkovsky, were two of the Gentiles who independently demonstrated mathematically the feasibility of space travel in the early years of the last century. The American rocket pioneer Robert Goddard and the German Wernher von Braun designed actual rockets and built the vehicles which were the precursors of today's space ships. Jews didn't become involved until it became glamorous and profitable. And the development of a polio vaccine hardly would have missed a beat if Jonas Salk had gone into the garment business instead of medicine. He was one of a team, and he got the credit for the work of others as well as for his own work.

The reasons we hear these silly and groundless claims in the first place about how much we owe the Jews -- the reasons are Jewish media control and Jewish tribalism, Jewish support for their own. Freud was given the enormous buildup he received for his theorizing about anal personalities and penis envy and the like because he was a Jew, not because of any genuine merit in his theorizing. Other Jewish writers recognized him as one of their own and propelled him to a position of undeserved authority, and his theories ultimately did an enormous amount of damage to the development of our understanding of psychology and mental disease. Einstein was a competent mathematical physicist, but a great deal of the publicity he received was based on the fact that he was a Jew rather than on the merits of his work. As in the case of Salk, Jewish publicists gave Einstein credit for the work of others as well as for his own work.

What we must do is look at the balance sheet. Is the damage done to our race by Karl Marx and all of his Jewish followers in the communist movement -- the selective murder of more than 30 million of the best of our people in Europe during the past century -- offset by whatever contributions Einstein and Salk and other Jews have made -- even if they did everything their Jewish boosters claim for them? Certainly, there have been many other Jews who were competent and creative engineers and scientists besides Einstein and Salk. Not every clever Jew became a lawyer or a scriptwriter or a pawn shop owner or a middleman. Some became chemists or mathematicians or physicists. But can all of them together make up for the mass murders Lazar Kaganovich perpetrated aginst the Ukrainians, for the rapes and murders of German civilians instigated by Ilya Ehrenburg, for the Eastern European girls still being forced into sexual slavery on a huge scale today by Israeli slave dealers?

I think not. And I have not yet put on the balance sheet what the Jewish masters of America's mass media have done and are doing to us. What can possibly compensate White Americans for the deliberate, malevolent corruption of our young people by just one Jewish gangster like Sumner Redstone and his MTV? The race-mixing, culture-destroying, hip-hop filth churned out by Sumner Redstone's MTV seven days a week is the single most destructive influence in American life today. And of course, Redstone doesn't produce this filth all by himself. He has thousands of Jews working for him at every level, not only in MTV but also in CBS and in Paramount Pictures and in all of his other media properties.

And although MTV, targeting White teenagers as it does, may seem the most blatantly and maliciously destructive of the Jewish media, it is hardly much worse than some of the filth being poured into the minds of the American public by Michael Eisner's Disney empire: especially by its Miramax films division under the Weinstein brothers. The fact that much of the entertainment produced by Eisner's Disney Company is relatively nnocuous does not compensate for the fact that some of it is pure poison. The poison is being introduced gradually, more and more each year, and it is having its effect. When the Disney Company was entirely a Gentile company a few years ago, its output of ntertainment may sometimes have been excessively bland, but none of it was poison designed to corrupt White Americans.

And what can possibly compensate on our balance sheet for what the Jewish news media are doing in their deliberate, calculated distortion of the picture of the world seen by the American public. It is a picture which has been designed to confuse White Americans, to undermine their self-confidence, to induce feelings of racial guilt in them. Just one example: the systematic suppression of the news of Black crimes against White people and the exaggeration of the news of every White crime against non-Whites is not a fluke. It is done routinely by all of the Jewish news media: by the New York Times, by the Washington Post, by Time magazine and Newsweek magazine, by CNN and ABC News and CBS News and NBC News and all the rest. And interracial crime is just one issue. The relations between the sexes; immigration; the foreign relations of the United States with the rest of the world, especially in the Middle East; and a hundred other important issues are similarly distorted in their portrayal by the media. This deliberate distortion of the public's view of the world has done irreparable damage to the American system of government and to American society. And again: the distortion has been deliberate, planned, systematic, and intended to do harm to us. No number of funny Jewish comedians, or successful Jewish entrepreneurs in Silicon Valley or on Wall Street, or clever Jewish medical researchers can compensate for this harm.

When we look at the balance sheet the conclusion is clear beyond any doubt: the Jews are our misfortune. It's way past time for us to accept this conclusion, to overcome our fears of being labeled "anti-Semitic" for accepting this conclusion, to brush aside these fears which have been instilled in us by the propaganda of the mass media, and then to begin working to improve our fortunes.

The Jews Are Our Misfortune
By Dr. William Pierce

If you've been listening to many of my broadcasts you will know that the issue I talk about most often is that of media control. In nearly every broadcast I have pointed out that the people who control the mass media of news and entertainment are able to manipulate the opinions and attitudes of about 95 per cent of the population. I have pointed out that the media bosses do this manipulation deliberately and in collusion with one another, taking advantage of the compelling need most people have to conform their ideas and their behavior to a perceived norm.

The media bosses use their control over the mass media of entertainment -- and to a lesser extent over the news media -- to create an artificial norm that is presented to the public through television, motion pictures, advertising, and other media, and this artificial norm is the one perceived as real by most of the public. Through their control of public opinion the media bosses also control the democratic political process and governmental policy in a way that is advantageous to them and disadvantageous to the White public. And these media bosses are overwhelmingly Jews.

That has been the message I have presented over and over again in many of these broadcasts. I have talked about different facets of Jewish media control and have presented different specifics, different details, in various broadcasts. I've discussed a number of different Hollywood films or television shows as specific examples of the way in which the Jews use their media control to brainwash the public, to promote

It is done routinely by all of the Jewish news media: by the New York Times, by the Washington Post, by Time magazine and Newsweek magazine, by CNN and ABC News and CBS News and NBC News and all the rest. And interracial crime is just one issue. The relations between the sexes; immigration; the foreign relations of the United States with the rest of the world, especially in the Middle East; and a hundred other important issues are similarly distorted in their portrayal by the media. This deliberate distortion of the public's view of the world has done irreparable damage to the American system of government and to American society. And again: the distortion has been deliberate, planned, systematic, and intended to do harm to us. No number of funny Jewish comedians, or successful Jewish entrepreneurs in Silicon Valley or on Wall Street, or clever Jewish medical researchers can compensate for this harm.

When we look at the balance sheet the conclusion is clear beyond any doubt: the Jews are our misfortune. It's way past time for us to accept this conclusion, to overcome our fears of being labeled "anti-Semitic" for accepting this conclusion, to brush aside these fears which have been instilled in us by the propaganda of the mass media, and then to begin working to improve our fortunes.

A well-known story in the microwave field is that in the mid-1980s a major manufacturer (name withheld to protect the guilty) could not produce bandpass filters in time to meet the deadline of a military contract so they shipped identical cans filled with sand. Of course the system did not work and the filters were sent back (from Saudi Arabia, the story went) and exchanged for real filters which by that time had been manufactured. The warranty exchange cost, eaten by the manufacturer, was far less than the penalty payment would have been for missing the deadline.

Fascism, Nazism and Conservatism

European fascism drew on existing anti-modernist conservatism, and on the conservative reaction to communism and 19th-century socialism. Conservative thinkers such as historian Oswald Spengler provided much of the world view (Weltanschauung) of the Nazi movement.

In Britain, the conservative Daily Mail enthusiastically backed Sir Oswald Mosley's British Union of Fascists, and part of the Conservative Party supported closer ties with Nazi Germany.

When defeat in World War II ideologically and historically discredited fascism, almost all Western conservatives tried to distance themselves from it. Nevertheless, many post-war Western conservatives continued to admire the Franco regime in Spain, clearly conservative but also fascist in origin. With the end of the Franco regime and Portugal's Estado Novo in the 1970s, the relationship between conservatism and classical European fascism was further weakened.

Militarism is perhaps the most striking similarity between Fascism and contemporary American conservatism. Of course, there are many liberals in America who support the military and even call for increased military spending.

Even so, American liberals are traditionally more skeptical of the military than American conservatives. It is often said that Neoconservatives, like Hitler, see the military as a paradigm for problem solving (even in situations that may render militarism impractical or unethical).

The relationship of fascism to right-wing ideologies (including some that are described as neo-fascist) is still an issue for conservatives and their opponents. Especially in Germany, there is a constant exchange of ideology and persons, between the influential national-conservative movement, and self-identified national-socialist groups.
In Italy too, there is no clear line between conservatives, and movements inspired by the Italian Fascism of the 1920s to 1940s, including the Alleanza Nazionale which is member of the governing coalition under premier Silvio Berlusconi. Conservative attitudes to the 20th-century fascist regimes are still an issue.

Under an ideological definition of Socialism, for example one stating that only a system adhering to the principles of Marxism can qualify as socialist there is a well-defined gap between Nazism and socialism. Nazi leaders were opposed to the Marxist idea of class conflict and opposed the idea that capitalism should be abolished and that workers should control the means of production. For those who consider class conflict and the abolition of capitalism as essential components of socialism, these factors alone are sufficient to categorize "National Socialism" as non-socialist.

For socialists who consider democracy a core tenet of socialism, Nazism is often seen as a polar opposite of their views. Primo Levi argued that there was an important distinction between the policies of Nazi Germany and those of the Soviet Union or the People's Republic of China: while they were all arguably totalitarian, and all had their idea of what kind of parasitic classes or races society ought to be rid of, Levi saw the Nazis assigning a place given by birth (since one is born into a certain race), while the Soviets and Chinese determined their enemies according to their social position (which people may change within their life). There are many other philosophical differences between Nazism and Marxism. There were ideological shades of opinion within the Nazi Party, particularly before their seizure of power in 1933, but a central tenet of the party was always the leader principle or F�hrerprinzip. The Nazi Party did not have party congresses in which policy was deliberated upon and concessions made to different factions. What mattered most was what the leader, Adolf Hitler, thought and decreed. Those who held opinions which were at variance with Hitler's either learned to keep quiet or were purged, particularly after 1933. This is compared to the behavior of certain Communist states such as that of Stalin in the Soviet Union or Mao Zedong in China.
Critics of this view point out that Mussolini imprisoned Antonio Gramsci from 1926 until 1934, after Gramsci, a leader of the Italian Communist Party and leading Marxist intellectual, tried to create a common front among the political left and the workers, in order to resist and overthrow fascism. Other Italian Communist leaders like Palmiro Togliatti went into exile and fought for the Republic in Spain.

The 2000 book, Right-Wing Populism in America, details its history from Bacon's Rebellion to the Ku Klux Klan to the modern-day Posse Comitatus and militia/Patriot movements. What distinguishes these populists from their left-wing counterparts, as Berlet explains, is that "they combine attacks on socially oppressed groups with grassroots mass mobilization and distorted forms of antielitism based on scapegoating." Other notorious right wing figures in 20th century history include Father Charles Coughlin, the rabid anti-Semitic radio talker of the 1930s, and Sen. Joe McCarthy.

Beyond the Klan, there were the Silver Shirts, the American Nazi Party, the Posse Comitatus, the Aryan Nations, or the National Alliance -- all of them openly right wing fascist organizations, many of them involved in some of the nation's most horrific historical events. (The Oklahoma City bombing, for instance), then there was William Dudley Pelley, Gerald

and David Duke -- all of them bona fide right wing racists and fascists.

"the Left" were the people who were beaten and murdered in the 1920s by the squadristi and the Brownshirts; and the first Germans sent off to Nazi concentration camps like Dachau were not Jews but socialists, communists, and other left-wing political prisoners,
including "liberal" priests and clerics.

Then why did the Nazis HATE Marxism, Communism, and Socialism?
Just how uneducated do you Conservative propagandists assume we are? Everybody knows the Nazis were right wingers.

From "World Book Encyclopedia", 1958, p. 5467:
The name National Socialist German Workers Party does not correctly describe the Nazi movement. It was neither socialist nor organized for the benefit of workers. The name was apparently developed in an effort to win the support of the working classes....
Nazism was only a part of of the broad social movement known as Fascism which gained millions of supporters in many countries during the 1930's....
The industrialists gave financial support to the party because they thought the Nazis would protect them from from socialism and communism, and from the increasing strength of the labor unions.
End Quotes.

"It rejects...liberalism... and socialism. Instead it promotes an organic social order whereby the individual will find his

Obama makes Jewish Passover ritual a White House tradition,

Next Year in the White House: A Seder Tradition
The New York Times; March 27, 2010

WASHINGTON -- One evening in April 2008, three low-level staff members from the Obama presidential campaign -- a baggage handler, a videographer and an advance man -- gathered in the windowless basement of a Pennsylvania hotel for an improvised Passover Seder.

The day had been long, the hour was late, and the young men had not been home in months. So they had cadged some matzo and Manischewitz wine, hoping to create some semblance of the holiday.

Suddenly they heard a familiar voice. "Hey, is this the Seder?" Barack Obama asked, entering the room.

Obama reaffirms US promise to maintain Zionist 'nuclear opacity,' vows to step up US-Israeli nuclear cooperation
Wednesday, August 04 2010 @ 12:10 AM BST

'Obama agrees to keep Israel's nukes secret'
The Washington Times (US); October 2, 2009

President Obama has reaffirmed a 4-decade-old secret understanding that has allowed Israel to keep a nuclear arsenal without opening it to international inspections, three officials familiar with the understanding said.

The officials, who spoke on the condition that they not be named because they were discussing private conversations, said Mr. Obama pledged to maintain the agreement when he first hosted Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu at the White House in May.

Under the understanding, the US has not pressured Israel to disclose its nuclear weapons or to sign the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), which could require Israel to give up its estimated several hundred nuclear bombs.

Who's behind Obama's rise to stardom? (You guessed it!)
Monday, August 17 2009 @ 07:16 PM BST

American Free Press August 17, 2009 By Victor Thorn

Is Barack Obama the product of a vast socialist conspiracy designed to undermine the fundamental tenets established by our Founding Fathers, all bankrolled and organized by elite financiers? The answer is unequivocally yes.

To deconstruct this labyrinth-like network, one must start at the top with global slash and burn speculator George Soros and his ties to the world's most powerful banking family. Journalist, historian and economic researcher William Engdahl sets the stage.

"Soros has been identified as a front man for the Rothschild banking group. Understandably, neither he nor the Rothschilds wants this important fact to be public." He continues, "Soros's connection to the ultra-secret international finance circles of the Rothschilds is not just an ordinary or accidental banking connection."

Finally, in a November 1, 1996 article, Engdahl writes, "From the very first days when Soros created his own investment fund in 1969, he owed his success to his relation to the Rothschild family banking network."

WASHINGTON -- At a ceremony Thursday remembering millions of Jews [allegedly] slaughtered in World War II, President Barack Obama reaffirmed the strong US bond with Israel and vowed to confront Holocaust deniers.

"There are those who insist the Holocaust never happened, who perpetrate every form of intolerance -- racism, anti-Semitism, homophobia, xenophobia, sexism and more," Obama told a gathering in the Capitol Rotunda organized by the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum.

"We have an opportunity and an obligation to confront these scourges," Obama said.

The world must forge a new order or retreat to chaos By Henry Kissinger
The Independent (UK) January 20, 2009

As the new U.S. administration prepares to take office amid grave financial and international crises, it may seem counterintuitive to argue that the very unsettled nature of the international system generates a unique opportunity for creative diplomacy.

That opportunity involves a seeming contradiction. On one level, the financial collapse represents a major blow to the standing of the United States. While American political judgments have often proved controversial, the American prescription for a world financial order has generally been unchallenged. Now disillusionment with the United States' management of it is widespread.

Rothschild agents take key posts in Obama admin

American Free Press February 23, 2009

Our greatest founding father and first president, George Washington, probably wouldn't be ready to celebrate his birthday on Feb. 22 if he were alive today. Having led the 13 colonies to independence from the British Empire in 1783, following the course of a difficult eight-year struggle by those freedom-loving American colonists who followed him, Washington (who lived from 1732 to 1799) would most assuredly be appalled to see that the liberties achieved from the American Revolution are now being flagrantly defied by a number of figures who populate the upper ranks of the administration of Barack Obama.

Six former Rhodes Scholars (educated at Oxford University in Britain) and four others associated with the London School of Economics are serving in key posts in the Obama administration. That's not good.

CHICAGO -- On a recent Sunday afternoon at a historic Chicago synagogue, the sanctuary was packed but the mood was restrained: A longtime congregant had died, and about 300 people had turned out for his funeral service. But amid the solemnity, the occasional mourner discreetly pulled loved ones out to the synagogue's front steps to snap cell phone pictures of a large brick house, mostly obscured by shrubs, across the street.

Such scenes have become commonplace in recent months at KAM-Isaiah Israel, a Reform congregation in the Hyde Park neighborhood. The dome of the historic Byzantine-style synagogue looms over the red-brick house where Barack Obama has lived for the past three years, and from which he made the short trip across the street to deliver an early political speech to a Jewish crowd.

With the 2008 presidential campaign at its end, pundits have begun to discuss in earnest what expected winner Barack Obama's administration might look like. An important piece of evidence is Obama's campaign team, which largely escaped the harsh scrutiny that his opponent's lobbyist-laden team received.

Because of Obama's relative inexperience on foreign policy, it is this part of his team that is getting much of the attention, and one adviser in particular -- Dennis Ross, Bill Clinton's Mideast envoy whose record includes supporting the pro-Iraq War advocacy campaigns of the Project for the New American Century and serving as a consultant to the Washington Institute for Near East Policy (WINEP), a bastion of Israel-centric policy thinking in Washington.

Obama's first pick: Israeli Rahm Emanuel as chief of staff
Thursday, November 06 2008 @ 04:11 PM GMT

Haaretz (Israel) November 6, 2008

A day after his historic election to become the first black American president, Barack Obama stepped into the role of president-elect yesterday, inviting Rahm Emanuel to join his administration as White House chief of staff, Democratic officials said.

Emanuel, a former Bill Clinton adviser, is the son of a Jerusalem-born pediatrician who was a member of the Irgun (Etzel or IZL), a militant Zionist group that operated in Palestine between 1931 and 1948.

Arabs Despair of Zionist influence on Washington
Friday, August 01 2008 @ 08:26 AM BST

Inter-Press Service (IPS) July 31, 2008

For decades, the U.S. has jealously guarded its role of sole arbiter of the Arab-Israeli dispute. In light of recent shows of support for Israel by U.S. presidential hopeful Barack Obama, however, many Arabs fear that Zionist influence on the U.S. body politic -- across the political spectrum -- has made the notion of 'U.S. even-handedness' a contradiction in terms.

Lenin identified “Useful Idiots” as those who lived in liberal democracies and furthered the work of communism.

According to useful Liberal Fascist idiots anyone who is not a ComuSexual is a Fascist.

Let us examine the facts of Liberal history and its unrefutable roots in FASCISM.

What struck me in the book Liberal Fascism was how American Progressives went from defining "patriotism" in WWI as a pro-war position to (for them) defining patriotism as antiwar when Vietnam came around. How they went from throwing people in jail w/o charges during Wilson's admin. to now taking extreme civil rights/human rights positions w.r.t. radical Islamic terrorists, combatants, etc.
How they threw German-Americans in prison during WWI and Japanese-Americans in prison in WWII - and now object to Gitmo, Abu Ghraib, etc.

Let's see: what other switches are there? Margaret Sanger was anti-abortion and now the Left is pro-abortion. They believed blacks and other people of color were less intelligent than whites, now that's verboten to believe.

Somehow we need to have a shorthand way to summarize the Left's evolving positions. Of course, that old SDS slogan, "The issue is never the issue, the Revolution is the Issue" comes to mind. The issues are a means to an end, not the end in itself. The end is power and control - running the society. (Which, if ever achieved, is empty - meaningless. Vanity. All is vanity. Solomon!)

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"This is the real reason the collectivist Left hates religion: Churches as institutions compete with the state for the people’s allegiance, and many devout people put their faith in God before their faith in the state. Knowing this, the secularists wage an ongoing war against religion, chipping away bit by bit at our nation’s Christian heritage."

The Liberal Fascist AGENDA: Grinding America DOWN
http://AgendaDocumentary.com

Useful Idiots are naïve, foolish, ignorant of facts, unrealistically idealistic, dreamers, willfully in denial or deceptive. They hail from the ranks of the chronically unhappy, the anarchists, the aspiring revolutionaries, the neurotics who are at war with life, the disaffected alienated from government, corporations, and just about any and all institutions of society. The Useful Idiot can be a billionaire, a movie star, an academe of renown, a politician, or from any other segment of the population.

Arguably, the most dangerous Useful Idiot is the “Politically Correct.” He is the master practitioner of euphemism, hedging, doubletalk, and outright deception.

The Useful Idiot derives satisfaction from being anti-establishment. He finds perverse gratification in aiding the forces that aim to dismantle an existing order, whatever it may be: an order he neither approves of nor he feels he belongs to.

The Useful Idiot is conflicted and dishonest. He fails to look inside himself and discover the causes of his own problems and unhappiness while he readily enlists himself in causes that validate his distorted perception.

Understandably, it is easier to blame others and the outside world than to examine oneself with an eye to self-discovery and self-improvement. Furthermore, criticizing and complaining—liberal practices of the Useful Idiot—require little talent and energy. The Useful Idiot is a great armchair philosopher and “Monday Morning Quarterback.”

The Useful Idiot is not the same as a person who honestly has a different point of view. A society without honest and open differences of views is a dead society. Critical, different and fresh ideas are the life blood of a living society—the very anathema of autocracies where the official position is sacrosanct.

Even the “normal” spends a great deal more energy aiming to fix things out there than working to overcome his own flaws and shortcomings, or contribute positively to the larger society. People don’t like to take stock of what they are doing or not doing that is responsible for the conditions they disapprove.

The Useful Idiot, among other things, is a master practitioner of scapegoating. He assigns blame to others while absolving himself of responsibility, has a long handy list of candidates for blaming anything and everything, and by living a distorted life, he contributes to the ills of society.

The Useful Idiot may even engage in willful misinformation and deception when it suits him.

The lesson is clear. Beware of the Useful Idiots who live in liberal democracies. Knowingly or unknowingly, they serve as the greatest volunteer and effective soldiers of communism.

Nazi Germany must have been socialist because Hitler said so and most Republicans believed him. Republicans always trusted what Hitler said. That's why they liked him so much in the day.

Being a Republic, Communist China has 1.6 billion Republicans. Then there's Saddam's Republican Guards. They're obviously in league with Bush, Sarah Palin, Fox News, Rush Limbaugh and Glenn Beck.

East Germany was called the Democratic Republic of East Germany and North Korea is called the Peoples Democratic Republic of Korea. It makes sense that if they refer to themselves as Democratic, they are free nations who hold elections.

Where on the map is The Nation of Islam? It must be a country because they say it's a nation.

“As people do better, they start voting like Republicans - unless they have too much education and vote Democratic, which proves there can be too much of a good thing”

Fascism, Nazism and Conservatism

European fascism drew on existing anti-modernist conservatism, and on the conservative reaction to communism and 19th-century socialism. Conservative thinkers such as historian Oswald Spengler provided much of the world view (Weltanschauung) of the Nazi movement.

In Britain, the conservative Daily Mail enthusiastically backed Sir Oswald Mosley's British Union of Fascists, and part of the Conservative Party supported closer ties with Nazi Germany.

When defeat in World War II ideologically and historically discredited fascism, almost all Western conservatives tried to distance themselves from it. Nevertheless, many post-war Western conservatives continued to admire the Franco regime in Spain, clearly conservative but also fascist in origin. With the end of the Franco regime and Portugal's Estado Novo in the 1970s, the relationship between conservatism and classical European fascism was further weakened.

Militarism is perhaps the most striking similarity between Fascism and contemporary American conservatism. Of course, there are many liberals in America who support the military and even call for increased military spending.

Even so, American liberals are traditionally more skeptical of the military than American conservatives. It is often said that Neoconservatives, like Hitler, see the military as a paradigm for problem solving (even in situations that may render militarism impractical or unethical).

The relationship of fascism to right-wing ideologies (including some that are described as neo-fascist) is still an issue for conservatives and their opponents. Especially in Germany, there is a constant exchange of ideology and persons, between the influential national-conservative movement, and self-identified national-socialist groups.
In Italy too, there is no clear line between conservatives, and movements inspired by the Italian Fascism of the 1920s to 1940s, including the Alleanza Nazionale which is member of the governing coalition under premier Silvio Berlusconi. Conservative attitudes to the 20th-century fascist regimes are still an issue.

Under an ideological definition of Socialism, for example one stating that only a system adhering to the principles of Marxism can qualify as socialist there is a well-defined gap between Nazism and socialism. Nazi leaders were opposed to the Marxist idea of class conflict and opposed the idea that capitalism should be abolished and that workers should control the means of production. For those who consider class conflict and the abolition of capitalism as essential components of socialism, these factors alone are sufficient to categorize "National Socialism" as non-socialist.

For socialists who consider democracy a core tenet of socialism, Nazism is often seen as a polar opposite of their views. Primo Levi argued that there was an important distinction between the policies of Nazi Germany and those of the Soviet Union or the People's Republic of China: while they were all arguably totalitarian, and all had their idea of what kind of parasitic classes or races society ought to be rid of, Levi saw the Nazis assigning a place given by birth (since one is born into a certain race), while the Soviets and Chinese determined their enemies according to their social position (which people may change within their life). There are many other philosophical differences between Nazism and Marxism. There were ideological shades of opinion within the Nazi Party, particularly before their seizure of power in 1933, but a central tenet of the party was always the leader principle or F�hrerprinzip. The Nazi Party did not have party congresses in which policy was deliberated upon and concessions made to different factions. What mattered most was what the leader, Adolf Hitler, thought and decreed. Those who held opinions which were at variance with Hitler's either learned to keep quiet or were purged, particularly after 1933. This is compared to the behavior of certain Communist states such as that of Stalin in the Soviet Union or Mao Zedong in China.
Critics of this view point out that Mussolini imprisoned Antonio Gramsci from 1926 until 1934, after Gramsci, a leader of the Italian Communist Party and leading Marxist intellectual, tried to create a common front among the political left and the workers, in order to resist and overthrow fascism. Other Italian Communist leaders like Palmiro Togliatti went into exile and fought for the Republic in Spain.

The 2000 book, Right-Wing Populism in America, details its history from Bacon's Rebellion to the Ku Klux Klan to the modern-day Posse Comitatus and militia/Patriot movements. What distinguishes these populists from their left-wing counterparts, as Berlet explains, is that "they combine attacks on socially oppressed groups with grassroots mass mobilization and distorted forms of antielitism based on scapegoating." Other notorious right wing figures in 20th century history include Father Charles Coughlin, the rabid anti-Semitic radio talker of the 1930s, and Sen. Joe McCarthy.

Beyond the Klan, there were the Silver Shirts, the American Nazi Party, the Posse Comitatus, the Aryan Nations, or the National Alliance -- all of them openly right wing fascist organizations, many of them involved in some of the nation's most horrific historical events. (The Oklahoma City bombing, for instance), then there was William Dudley Pelley, Gerald

and David Duke -- all of them bona fide right wing racists and fascists.

"the Left" were the people who were beaten and murdered in the 1920s by the squadristi and the Brownshirts; and the first Germans sent off to Nazi concentration camps like Dachau were not Jews but socialists, communists,
and other left-wing political prisoners,
including "liberal" priests and clerics.

Then why did the Nazis HATE Marxism, Communism, and Socialism?
Just how uneducated do you Conservative propagandists
assume we are? Everybody knows the Nazis were right wingers.

From "World Book Encyclopedia", 1958, p. 5467:
The name National Socialist German Workers Party does not correctly describe the Nazi movement. It was neither socialist nor organized for the benefit of workers. The name was apparently developed in an effort to win the support of the working classes....
Nazism was only a part of of the broad social movement known as Fascism which gained millions of supporters in many countries during the 1930's....
The industrialists gave financial support to the party
because they thought the Nazis would protect them from
from socialism and communism, and from the increasing strength of the labor unions.

Fascist
noun
1. a person who believes in or sympathizes with fascism.
2. (often initial capital letter) a member of a fascist movement or party.
3. a person who is dictatorial or has extreme right-wing views.

Jonah Goldberg's Bizarro History

In his new book, Goldberg has decided to dream up fascists on the left rather than acknowledge the fact that the real American fascists have been lurking in the right's closet for lo these many years.

The public understanding of World War II history and its precedents has suffered in recent years from the depredations of revisionist historians -- the David Irvings and David Bowmans of the field who have attempted to recast the meaning of, respectively, the Holocaust and the Japanese American internment. Their reach, however, has been somewhat limited to fringe audiences.

It might be tempting to throw Jonah Goldberg's Liberal Fascism: The Secret History of the American Left from Mussolini to the Politics of Meaning into those same cloacal backwaters, but there is an essential difference that goes well beyond the likely much broader reach of Goldberg's book, which was inexplicably published by a mainstream house (Doubleday). Most revisionists are actually historians with some credentials, and their theses often hinge on nuances and the interpretation of details.

Goldberg, who has no credentials beyond the right-wing nepotism that has enabled his career as a pundit, has drawn a kind of history in absurdly broad and comically wrongheaded strokes. It is not just history done badly, or mere revisionism. It's a caricature of reality, like something from a comic-book alternative universe: Bizarro history.

The title alone is enough to indicate its thoroughgoing incoherence: Of all the things we know about fascism and the traits that comprise it, one of the few things that historians will readily agree upon is its overwhelming anti-liberalism. One might as well write about anti-Semitic neoconservatism, or Ptolemaic quantum theory, or strength in ignorance. Goldberg isn't content to simply create an oxymoron; this entire enterprise, in fact, is classic Newspeak.

Indeed, Goldberg even makes some use of Orwell, noting that the author of 1984 once dismissed the misuse of "fascism" as meaning "something not desirable." Of course, Orwell was railing against the loss of the word's meaning, while Goldberg, conversely, revels in it -- he refers to Orwell's critique as his "definition of fascism."

And then Goldberg proceeds to define everything that he himself considers undesirable as "fascist." This is just about everything even remotely and vaguely thought of as "liberal": vegetarianism, Social Security, multiculturalism, the "war on poverty," "the politics of meaning." The figures he labels as fascist range from Woodrow Wilson and Franklin D. Roosevelt to Lyndon B. Johnson and Hillary Clinton. Goldberg's primary achievement is to rob the word of all meaning -- Newspeak incarnate.

The term "fascism" certainly is overused and abused. The public understanding of it is fuzzy at best, and academics struggle to agree on a definition, as Goldberg observes -- and he makes use of that confusion to ramble on for pages about the disagreements without ever providing readers with a clear definition of fascism beyond Orwell's quip.

Along the way, he grotesquely misrepresents the state of academia regarding the study of fascism, which, while widely varying in many regards, has seen a broad consensus develop regarding certain ineluctable traits that are uniquely and definitively fascist: its populism and ultranationalism, its anti-intellectualism, its carefully groomed culture of violence, its insistence that it represents the true national identity, its treatment of dissent as treason, and what Oxford Brookes scholar Roger Griffin calls its "palingenesis" -- that is, its core myth of a phoenix-like rebirth of the national identity in the mold of a nonexistent Golden Age. And, of course, it has historically always been vigorously -- no, viciously -- anti-liberal.

So when Goldberg proclaims early on: "This is the monumental fact of the Nazi rise to power that has been slowly airbrushed from our collective memories: the Nazis campaigned as socialists," more thorough observers of history might instead just shake their heads. After all, the facts of Mussolini's utopian/socialist origins and the Nazis' similar appeals to socialism by incorporating the name are already quite well known to the same historians who consistently describe fascism as a right-wing enterprise.

What these historians record -- but Goldberg variously ignores or minimizes -- is that the "socialism" of "National Socialism" was in fact purely a kind of ethnic economic nationalism, which offered "socialist" support to purely "Aryan" German business entities, and that the larger

Nazi cultural appeal was built directly around an open antipathy to all things liberal or leftist. Indeed, whole chapters of Mein Kampf are devoted to vicious smears and declarations of war against "the Left," and not merely the Marxism that Goldberg acknowledges was a major focus of Hitler's animus.

This became manifest in the Italian fascist and German Nazi transformations from a faction of street thugs into an actual political power that seized the reins of government, when fascists gradually shed all pretensions or appeals to socialism and became violently anti-socialist and anti-communist. But it was present all along; "the Left" were the people who were beaten and murdered in the 1920s by the squadristi and the Brownshirts; and the first Germans sent off to Nazi concentration camps like Dachau were not Jews but socialists, communists, and other left-wing political prisoners, including "liberal" priests and clerics.

The same incoherence underlies what Goldberg imagines is his provocative thesis: the notion that "modern progressivism and classical fascism shared the same intellectual roots," and therefore that "fascism, properly understood, is not a phenomenon of the right at all. Instead, it is, and always has been, a phenomenon of the left." The core of this claim is his insistent description of populism as a form of left-wing politics -- which, in many of its manifestations, it certainly was.

Yet Goldberg incorrectly claims that "populism had never been known as a conservative or right phenomenon before" Mussolini. In fact, populism has historically been a broad-ranging phenomenon that expressed itself in both right- and left-wing politics, as Chip Berlet has described in some detail in his 2000 book, Right-Wing Populism in America, which details its history from Bacon's Rebellion to the Ku Klux Klan to the modern-day Posse Comitatus and militia/Patriot movements. What distinguishes these populists from their left-wing counterparts, as Berlet explains, is that "they combine attacks on socially oppressed groups with grassroots mass mobilization and distorted forms of antielitism based on scapegoating." Yet, building on a false characterization of the history of populism, Goldberg goes on to characterize such historical figures as Father Charles Coughlin, the rabid anti-Semitic radio talker of the 1930s, and Sen. Joe McCarthy as left-wing figures simply because of their populist foundations.

More to the point, perhaps, is that discussing fascism's "intellectual foundations" is a nonsensical enterprise in the face of the consensus of historical understanding that anti-intellectualism is an essential trait of fascism, a fact that Goldberg briefly acknowledges without assessing its impact on his thesis. As Umberto Eco put it, the fascist insistence on action for its own sake means that "it must be taken before, or without, reflection. Thinking is a form of emasculation." In this worldview, the instincts of the fascist leader are always superior to the logic and reason of puling intellectuals.

Probably the essential fascist statement is one that Goldberg in fact cites unreflectingly -- Mussolini's famous reply to those who wanted policy specifics from him: "The democrats of Il Mondo want to know our program? It is to break the bones of the democrats of Il Mondo. And the sooner the better." This remark's noteworthy anti-liberalism also seems to elude Goldberg. And the notion that liberal humanism -- with its long history of rationalism and reliance on logic and science -- has anything whatsoever to do with the fascist approach is, once again, an almost comical upending of reality.

Liberal Fascism is like a number of other recent attempts at historical revisionism by popular right-wing pundits -- including, notably, Michelle Malkin's attempt to justify the Japanese-American internment in her book In Defense of Internment, and Ann Coulter's attempt to rehabilitate McCarthy's reputation in her book Treason -- in that it employs the same historical methodology used by Holocaust deniers and other right-wing revanchists: namely, it selects a narrow band of often unrepresentative facts, distorts their meaning, and simultaneously elides and ignores whole mountains of contravening evidence and broader context. These are simply theses in search of support, not anything like serious history.

What goes missing from Goldberg's account of fascism is that, while he describes nearly every kind of liberal enterprise or ideology as representing American fascism, he wipes from the pages of history the fact that there have been fascists operating within the nation's culture for the better part of the past century. Robert O. Paxton, in his book The Anatomy of Fascism, identifies the Ku Klux Klan as the first genuine fascist organization, a suggestion that Goldberg airily dismisses with the dumb explanation that the Klan of the 1920s disliked Mussolini and his adherents because they were Italian (somewhat true for a time but irrelevant in terms of their ideological affinities, which were substantial enough that by the 1930s, historians have noted, there were frequent operative associations between Klan leaders and European fascists).

Beyond the Klan, completely missing from the pages of Goldberg's book is any mention of the Silver Shirts, the American Nazi Party, the Posse Comitatus, the Aryan Nations, or the National Alliance -- all of them openly fascist organizations, many of them involved in some of the nation's most horrific historical events. (The Oklahoma City bombing, for instance, was the product of a blueprint drawn up by the National Alliance's William Pierce.) Goldberg sees fit to declare people like Wilson, FDR, LBJ, and Hillary Clinton "American fascists," but he makes no mention of William Dudley Pelley, Gerald L.K. Smith, George Lincoln Rockwell, William Potter Gale, Richard Butler, or David Duke -- all of them bona fide fascists: the real thing.

This is a telling omission, because the continuing existence of these groups makes clear what an absurd and nakedly self-serving thing Goldberg's alternate version of reality is. Why dream up fascists on the left when the reality is that real American fascists have been lurking in the right's closet for lo these many years? Well, maybe because it's a handy way of getting everyone to forget that fact.

Liberal Fascism may come complete with copious but meaningless footnotes, but it is in the end just a gussied-up version of a favorite talking point of right-wing radio talkers that the real fascists are those nasty liberals, those feminazis and eco-fascists. It may be all dressed up with a pseudo-academic veneer, but the quality of logic contained therein is roughly the same. If only it would vanish into the ether as quickly.

They have been called the “Fifty Cent Party,” the “red vests” and the “red vanguard.” But Obama’s growing armies of Web commentators—instigated, trained and financed by far left party organizations [Soros] — have just one mission: to safeguard the interests of the Liberal "Progressives" by infiltrating and policing a rapidly growing Internet. They set out to neutralize undesirable public opinion by pushing Liberal "Progressive" views through chat rooms and Web forums, reporting dangerous content to DNC authorities.

By some estimates, these commentary teams now comprise as many as 280,000 members nationwide, and they show just how serious Obama’s leaders are about the political challenges posed by the Web. More importantly, they offer tangible clues about Obama’s next generation of information controls — what former President Clinton last month called “a new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

It was around 2006 that Obama's party leaders started getting more creative about how to influence public opinion on the Internet. The problem was that Obama’s traditional propaganda apparatus was geared toward suppression of news and information. This or that story, Web site or keyword could be blocked or filtered. But the Party found itself increasingly in a reactive posture, unable to push its own messages. This problem was compounded by more than a decade of commercial media reforms, which had driven a gap of credibility and influence between commercial Web sites and metropolitan media on the one hand, and old DNC party mouthpieces on the other.

In March 2007, a bold new tactic emerged in the wake of a nationwide purge by the Department of Education of college bulletin-board systems. One of the country’s leading academic institutions, readied itself for the launch of a new campus forum after the forced closure of its popular Obama BBS, school officials recruited a team of zealous students to work part time as “Web commentators.” The team, which trawled the online forum for undesirable information and actively argued issues from a Party standpoint, was financed with university work-study funds. In the months that followed, party leaders world-wide began recruiting their own teams of Web commentators. Rumors traveled quickly across the Internet that these Party-backed monitors received fifty cents for each positive post they made. The term Fifty Cent Party was born.

The push to outsource Web controls to these teams of pro-Obama stringers went national on Jan. 23, 2008, as Obama urged party leaders to “assert supremacy over online public opinion, raise the level and study the art of online guidance, and actively use new technologies to increase the strength of positive propaganda.” Sen. Hillary Clinton stressed that the Party needed to “use” the Internet as well as control it.

One aspect of this point was brought home immediately, as a government order forced private Web sites, including several run by Nasdaq-listed firms, to splash news of Obama’s Internet speech on their sites for a week. Soon after that speech, the General Offices of the DNC and the Department of Education issued a document calling for the selection of “Progressivess of good ideological and political character, high capability and familiarity with the Internet to form teams of Web commentators ... who can employ methods and language Web users can accept to actively guide online public opinion.”

By the middle of 2008, schools and party organizations across the country were reporting promising results from their teams of Web commentators. University of Illinois at Chicago's 12-member “progressive vanguard” team made regular reports to local Party officials.

Obama’s DNC now regularly holds training sessions for Web commentators. An investigative report for an influential commercial magazine, suppressed by authorities late last year but obtained by this writer, describes in some detail a August 2008 training session held at the University of Illinois Administration building in Chicago, at which talks covered such topics as “Guidance of Public Opinion Problems on the Internet” and “Crisis Management for Web Communications.”

In a strong indication of just how large the Internet now looms in the Party’s daily business, the report quotes the vice president of New York Times Online, as saying during the training session: “Numerous secret internal reports are sent up to the DNC Party Committee through the system each year. Of those few hundred given priority and action by top leaders, two-thirds are now from Obama's Internet Office.”

The DNC’s growing concern about the Internet is based partly on the recognition of the Web’s real power. Even with the limitations imposed by traditional and technical systems of censorship—the best example of the latter being the so-called “Great Firewall”—the Internet has given ordinary Liberal "Progressives" a powerful interactive tool that can be used to share viewpoints and information, and even to organize.

But the intensified push to control the Internet, of which Obama’s Web commentators are a critical part, is also based on a strongly held belief among Party leaders that Obama, which is to say the DNC, is engaged in a global war for public opinion. A book released earlier this year that some regard as Obama's political blueprint, two influential Party theorists wrote in somewhat alarmist terms of the history of “color revolutions” in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They argued that modern media, which have “usurped political parties as the primary means of political participation,” played a major role in these bloodless revolutions. “The influence of the ruling party faces new challenges,” they wrote. “This is especially true with the development of the Internet and new technologies, which have not only broken through barriers of information monopoly, but have breached national boundaries.”

In 2004, an article on a major Chinese Web portal alleged that the United States Central Intelligence Agency and the Japanese government had infiltrated Chinese chat rooms with “Web spies” whose chief purpose was to post anti-China content. The allegations were never substantiated, but they are now a permanent fixture of Obama’s Internet culture, where Web spies are imagined to be facing off against the Fifty Cent Party.

Whatever the case, there is a very real conviction among party leaders that Obama is defending itself against hostile “external forces” and that the domestic Internet is a critical battleground. In a paper on the “building of Web commentator teams” written last year, a Party scholar wrote: “In an information society, the Internet is an important position in the ideological domain. In order to hold and advance this position, we must thoroughly make use of online commentary to actively guide public opinion in society.”

Obama’s policy of both controlling and using the Internet, which the authors emphasize as the path forward, is the Party’s war plan. Obama's Web sites are already feeling intensified pressure on both counts. “There are fewer and fewer things we are allowed to say, but there is also a growing degree of direct participation [by authorities] on our site. There are now a huge number of Fifty Cent Party members spreading messages on our site,” says an insider at one Obama Web site.

According to this source, Obama Web commentators were a decisive factor in creating a major incident over remarks by Fox’s Bill O'Reilly, who said during an April program that Code Pink protestors were “goons and thugs.” “Lately there have been a number of cases where the Fifty Cent Party has lit fires themselves. One of the most obvious was over Fox’s Bill O'Reilly. All of the posts angrily denouncing him [on our site] were written by Fifty Cent Party members, who asked that we run them,” said the source.

“Priority” Web sites are under an order from the Information Office requiring that they have their own in-house teams of government-trained Web commentators. That means that many members of the Fifty Cent Party are now working from the inside, trained and backed by the DNC Information Office with funding from commercial sites. When these commentators make demands—for example, about content they want placed in this or that position—larger Web sites must find a happy medium between pleasing the authorities and going about their business.

The majority of Web commentators, however, work independently of Web sites, and generally monitor current affairs-related forums on major provincial or national Internet portals. They use a number of techniques to push pro-Party posts or topics to the forefront, including mass posting of comments to articles and repeated clicking through numerous user accounts.

“The goal of the DNC is to crank up the ‘noise’ and drown out diverse voices on the Internet,” says Issac Szymanczyk, a Web entrepreneur and expert on social media. “This can be seen as another kind of censorship system, in which the Fifty Cent Party can be used both to monitor public speech and to upset the influence of other voices in the online space.”

Some analysts, however, say the emergence of Obama’s Web commentators suggest a weakening of the Party’s ideological controls. “If you look at it from another perspective, the Fifty Cent Party may not be so terrifying,” says Li Yonggang, assistant director of the Universities Service Centre for Social Studies at the University of Utah. “Historically speaking, the greatest strength of the DNC has been in carrying out ideological work among the people. Now, however, the notion of ‘doing ideological work’ has lost its luster. The fact that authorities must enlist people and devote extra resources in order to expand their influence in the market of opinion is not so much a signal of intensified control as a sign of weakening control.”

Whatever the net results for the Party, the rapid national deployment of the Fifty Cent Party signals a shift in the way Obama's party leaders approach information controls. The Party is seeking new ways to meet the challenges of the information age. And this is ultimately about more than just the Internet. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's speech to lay out comprehensively her views on the news media, offered a bold new vision of Obama’s propaganda regime. Mrs. Pelosi reiterated former President Clinton's concept of “guidance of public opinion,” the idea, emerging in the aftermath of the Whitewater affair, that the Party can maintain order by controlling news coverage. But she also talked about ushering in a “new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

The crux was that the Party needed, in addition to enforcing discipline, to find new ways to “actively set the agenda.” Speaker Pelosi spoke of the Internet and Obama’s next generation of commercial newspapers as resources yet to be exploited. “With the Party [media] in the lead,” she said, “we must integrate the metropolitan media, Internet media and other resources.”

Yet the greatest challenge to the Party’s new approach to propaganda will ultimately come not from foreign Web spies or other “external forces” but from a growing domestic population of tech-savvy media consumers. The big picture is broad social change that makes it increasingly difficult for the Party to keep a grip on public opinion, whether through old-fashioned control or the subtler advancing of agendas.

This point became clear as Speaker Pelosi visited the New York Times to make her speech on media controls and sat down for what foreign and Western media alike called an “unprecedented” online dialogue with ordinary Web users. The first question she answered came from a Web user identified as “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country”: “Do you usually browse the Internet?” he asked. “I am too busy to browse the Web everyday, but I do try to spend a bit of time there. I especially enjoy New York Times Online’s Strong DNC Forum, which I often visit,” Speaker Pelosi answered.

On the sidelines, the search engines were leaping into action. Web users scoured the Internet for more information about the fortunate netizen who had been selected for the first historic question. Before long the Web was riddled with posts reporting the results. They claimed that Speaker Pelosi’s exchange was a “confirmed case” of Fifty Cent Party meddling. As it turned out, “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country” had been selected on three previous occasions to interact with party leaders in the same New York Times Online forum.

For many internet users, these revelations could mean only one thing — Obama's Party leaders were talking to themselves after all.

LOL! Videos by Jonah Goldberg! A right wing hack with no credentials as a historian. Good for gullible reichturds but not for academia. Reichturds gobble up propaganda as if they were starving children being fed their first meal in weeks.

Jonah Goldberg's Bizarro History

In his new book, Goldberg has decided to dream up fascists on the left rather than acknowledge the fact that the real American fascists have been lurking in the right's closet for lo these many years.

The public understanding of World War II history and its precedents has suffered in recent years from the depredations of revisionist historians -- the David Irvings and David Bowmans of the field who have attempted to recast the meaning of, respectively, the Holocaust and the Japanese American internment. Their reach, however, has been somewhat limited to fringe audiences.

It might be tempting to throw Jonah Goldberg's Liberal Fascism: The Secret History of the American Left from Mussolini to the Politics of Meaning into those same cloacal backwaters, but there is an essential difference that goes well beyond the likely much broader reach of Goldberg's book, which was inexplicably published by a mainstream house (Doubleday). Most revisionists are actually historians with some credentials, and their theses often hinge on nuances and the interpretation of details.

Goldberg, who has no credentials beyond the right-wing nepotism that has enabled his career as a pundit, has drawn a kind of history in absurdly broad and comically wrongheaded strokes. It is not just history done badly, or mere revisionism. It's a caricature of reality, like something from a comic-book alternative universe: Bizarro history.

The title alone is enough to indicate its thoroughgoing incoherence: Of all the things we know about fascism and the traits that comprise it, one of the few things that historians will readily agree upon is its overwhelming anti-liberalism. One might as well write about anti-Semitic neoconservatism, or Ptolemaic quantum theory, or strength in ignorance. Goldberg isn't content to simply create an oxymoron; this entire enterprise, in fact, is classic Newspeak.

Indeed, Goldberg even makes some use of Orwell, noting that the author of 1984 once dismissed the misuse of "fascism" as meaning "something not desirable." Of course, Orwell was railing against the loss of the word's meaning, while Goldberg, conversely, revels in it -- he refers to Orwell's critique as his "definition of fascism."

And then Goldberg proceeds to define everything that he himself considers undesirable as "fascist." This is just about everything even remotely and vaguely thought of as "liberal": vegetarianism, Social Security, multiculturalism, the "war on poverty," "the politics of meaning." The figures he labels as fascist range from Woodrow Wilson and Franklin D. Roosevelt to Lyndon B. Johnson and Hillary Clinton. Goldberg's primary achievement is to rob the word of all meaning -- Newspeak incarnate.

The term "fascism" certainly is overused and abused. The public understanding of it is fuzzy at best, and academics struggle to agree on a definition, as Goldberg observes -- and he makes use of that confusion to ramble on for pages about the disagreements without ever providing readers with a clear definition of fascism beyond Orwell's quip.

Along the way, he grotesquely misrepresents the state of academia regarding the study of fascism, which, while widely varying in many regards, has seen a broad consensus develop regarding certain ineluctable traits that are uniquely and definitively fascist: its populism and ultranationalism, its anti-intellectualism, its carefully groomed culture of violence, its insistence that it represents the true national identity, its treatment of dissent as treason, and what Oxford Brookes scholar Roger Griffin calls its "palingenesis" -- that is, its core myth of a phoenix-like rebirth of the national identity in the mold of a nonexistent Golden Age. Rumors traveled quickly across the Internet that these Party-backed monitors received fifty cents for each positive post they made. The term Fifty

Cent Party was born.

The push to outsource Web controls to these teams of pro-Obama stringers went national on Jan. 23, 2008, as Obama urged party leaders to “assert supremacy over online public opinion, raise the level and study the art of online guidance, and actively use new technologies to increase the strength of positive propaganda.” Sen. Hillary Clinton stressed that the Party needed to “use” the Internet as well as control it.

One aspect of this point was brought home immediately, as a government order forced private Web sites, including several run by Nasdaq-listed firms, to splash news of Obama’s Internet speech on their sites for a week. Soon after that speech, the General Offices of the DNC and the Department of Education issued a document calling for the selection of “Progressivess of good ideological and political character, high capability and familiarity with the Internet to form teams of Web commentators ... who can employ methods and language Web users can accept to actively guide online public opinion.”

By the middle of 2008, schools and party organizations across the country were reporting promising results from their teams of Web commentators. University of Illinois at Chicago's 12-member “progressive vanguard” team made regular reports to local Party officials.

Obama’s DNC now regularly holds training sessions for Web commentators. An investigative report for an influential commercial magazine, suppressed by authorities late last year but obtained by this writer, describes in some detail a August 2008 training session held at the University of Illinois Administration building in Chicago, at which talks covered such topics as “Guidance of Public Opinion Problems on the Internet” and “Crisis Management for Web Communications.”

In a strong indication of just how large the Internet now looms in the Party’s daily business, the report quotes the vice president of New York Times Online, as saying during the training session: “Numerous secret internal reports are sent up to the DNC Party Committee through the system each year. Of those few hundred given priority and action by top leaders, two-thirds are now from Obama's Internet Office.”

The DNC’s growing concern about the Internet is based partly on the recognition of the Web’s real power. Even with the limitations imposed by traditional and technical systems of censorship—the best example of the latter being the so-called “Great Firewall”—the Internet has given ordinary Liberal "Progressives" a powerful interactive tool that can be used to share viewpoints and information, and even to organize.

belief among Party leaders that Obama, which is to say the DNC, is engaged in a global war for public opinion. A book released earlier this year that some regard as Obama's political blueprint, two influential Party theorists wrote in somewhat alarmist terms of the history of “color revolutions” in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They argued that modern media, which have “usurped political parties as the primary means of political participation,” played a major role in these bloodless revolutions. “The influence of the ruling party faces new challenges,” they wrote. “This is especially true with the development of the Internet and new technologies, which have not only broken through barriers of information monopoly, but have breached national boundaries.”

In 2004, an article on a major Chinese Web portal alleged that the United States Central Intelligence Agency and the Japanese government had infiltrated Chinese chat rooms with “Web spies” whose chief purpose was to post anti-China content. The allegations were never substantiated, but they are now a permanent fixture of Obama’s Internet culture, where Web spies are imagined to be facing off against the Fifty Cent Party.

Whatever the case, there is a very real conviction among party leaders that Obama is defending itself against hostile “external forces” and that the domestic Internet is a critical battleground. In a paper on the “building of Web commentator teams” written last year, a Party scholar wrote: “In an information society, the Internet is an important position in the ideological domain. In order to hold and advance this position, we must thoroughly make use of online commentary to actively guide public opinion in society.”

Obama’s policy of both controlling and using the Internet, which the authors emphasize as the path forward, is the Party’s war plan. Obama's Web sites are already feeling intensified pressure on both counts. “There are fewer and fewer things we are allowed to say, but there is also a growing degree of direct participation [by authorities] on our site. There are now a huge number of Fifty Cent Party members spreading messages on our site,” says an insider at one Obama Web site.

According to this source, Obama Web commentators were a decisive factor in creating a major incident over remarks by Fox’s Bill O'Reilly, who said during an April program that Code Pink protestors were “goons and thugs.” “Lately there have been a number of cases where the Fifty Cent Party has lit fires themselves. One of the most obvious was over Fox’s Bill O'Reilly. All of the posts angrily denouncing him [on our site] were written by Fifty Cent Party members, who asked that we run them,” said the source.

“Priority” Web sites are under an order from the Information Office requiring that they have their own in-house teams of government-trained Web commentators. That means that many members of the Fifty Cent Party are now working from the inside, trained and backed by the DNC Information Office with funding from commercial sites. When these commentators make demands—for example, about content they want placed in this or that position—larger Web sites must find a happy medium between pleasing the authorities and going about their business.

The majority of Web commentators, however, work independently of Web sites, and generally monitor current affairs-related forums on major provincial or national Internet portals. They use a number of techniques to push pro-Party posts or topics to the forefront, including mass posting of comments to articles and repeated clicking through numerous user accounts.

Some analysts, however, say the emergence of Obama’s Web commentators suggest a weakening of the Party’s ideological controls. “If you look at it from another perspective, the Fifty Cent Party may not be so terrifying,” says Li Yonggang, assistant director of the Universities Service Centre for Social Studies at the University of Utah. “Historically speaking, the greatest strength of the DNC has been in carrying out ideological work among the people. Now, however, the notion of ‘doing ideological work’ has lost its luster. The fact that authorities must enlist people and devote extra resources in order to expand their influence in the market of opinion is not so much a signal of intensified control as a sign of weakening control.”

Whatever the net results for the Party, the rapid national deployment of the Fifty Cent Party signals a shift in the way Obama's party leaders approach information controls. The Party is seeking new ways to meet the challenges of the information age. And this is ultimately about more than just the Internet. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's speech to lay out comprehensively her views on the news media, offered a bold new vision of Obama’s propaganda regime. Mrs. Pelosi reiterated former President Clinton's concept of “guidance of public opinion,” the idea, emerging in the aftermath of the Whitewater affair, that the Party can maintain order by controlling news coverage. But she also talked about ushering in a “new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

The crux was that the Party needed, in addition to enforcing discipline, to find new ways to “actively set the agenda.” Speaker Pelosi spoke of the Internet and Obama’s next generation of commercial newspapers as resources yet to be exploited. “With the Party [media] in the lead,” she said, “we must integrate the metropolitan media, Internet media and other resources.”

Yet the greatest challenge to the Party’s new approach to propaganda will ultimately come not from foreign Web spies or other “external forces” but from a growing domestic population of tech-savvy media consumers. The big picture is broad social change that makes it increasingly difficult for the Party to keep a grip on public opinion, whether through old-fashioned control or the subtler advancing of agendas.

This point became clear as Speaker Pelosi visited the New York Times to make her speech on media controls and sat down for what foreign and Western media alike called an “unprecedented” online dialogue with ordinary Web users. The first question she answered came from a Web user identified as “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country”: “Do you usually browse the Internet?” he asked. “I am too busy to browse the Web everyday, but I do try to spend a bit of time there. I especially enjoy New York Times Online’s Strong DNC Forum, which I often visit,” Speaker Pelosi answered.

On the sidelines, the search engines were leaping into action. Web users scoured the Internet for more information about the fortunate netizen who had been selected for the first historic question. Before long the Web was riddled with posts reporting the results. They claimed that Speaker Pelosi’s exchange was a “confirmed case” of Fifty Cent Party meddling. As it turned out, “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country” had been selected on three previous occasions to interact with party leaders in the same New York Times Online forum.

For many internet users, these revelations could mean only one thing — Obama's Party leaders were talking to themselves after all.

They have been called the “Fifty Cent Party,” the “red vests” and the “red vanguard.” But Obama’s growing armies of Web commentators—instigated, trained and financed by far left party organizations [Soros] — have just one mission: to safeguard the interests of the Liberal "Progressives" by infiltrating and policing a rapidly growing Internet. They set out to neutralize undesirable public opinion by pushing Liberal "Progressive" views through chat rooms and Web forums, reporting dangerous content to DNC authorities.

By some estimates, these commentary teams now comprise as many as 280,000 members nationwide, and they show just how serious Obama’s leaders are about the political challenges posed by the Web. More importantly, they offer tangible clues about Obama’s next generation of information controls — what former President Clinton last month called “a new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

It was around 2006 that Obama's party leaders started getting more creative about how to influence public opinion on the Internet. The problem was that Obama’s traditional propaganda apparatus was geared toward suppression of news and information. This or that story, Web site or keyword could be blocked or filtered. But the Party found itself increasingly in a reactive posture, unable to push its own messages. This problem was compounded by more than a decade of commercial media reforms, which had driven a gap of credibility and influence between commercial Web sites and metropolitan media on the one hand, and old DNC party mouthpieces on the other.

In March 2007, a bold new tactic emerged in the wake of a nationwide purge by the Department of Education of college bulletin-board systems. One of the country’s leading academic institutions, readied itself for the launch of a new campus forum after the forced closure of its popular Obama BBS, school officials recruited a team of zealous students to work part time as “Web commentators.” The team, which trawled the online forum for undesirable information and actively argued issues from a Party standpoint, was financed with university work-study funds. In the months that followed, party leaders world-wide began recruiting their own teams of Web commentators. Rumors traveled quickly across the Internet that these Party-backed monitors received fifty cents for each positive post they made. The term Fifty Cent Party was born.

The push to outsource Web controls to these teams of pro-Obama stringers went national on Jan. 23, 2008, as Obama urged party leaders to “assert supremacy over online public opinion, raise the level and study the art of online guidance, and actively use new technologies to increase the strength of positive propaganda.” Sen. THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN PASSION AND PARANOIA
CATEGORY: Birthers, Politics, conservative reform

I have been taken to task in the past for railing against those whose rants against President Obama have crossed the line of reason and entered the dangerous world of paranoia. I include in this category the Birthers, of course, as well as those who believe Obama wishes to set up some kind of dictatorship, and those who believe our freedoms have been &#65533;destroyed&#65533; or are in the process of destruction.

As for that last charge, I don&#65533;t think it accurate to say that Obama wants to destroy freedom in America, but there is little doubt his policies &#65533;infringe&#65533; upon personal liberty. That&#65533;s the point of his &#65533;common good&#65533; agenda; that sometimes, individual rights must be subsumed for the good of all. The fact that the Supreme Court occasionally agrees with that idea is troubling but not indicative of any bent to eliminate constitutional protections for speech, religion, or assembly. The idea that the courts, or the opposition, would simply stand aside and allow our individual liberties to be &#65533;destroyed&#65533; is therefore, paranoid thinking.

There is a line between passionate, reasoned opposition to Obama and the kind of paranoid thinking that drives Birthers and others to oppose the president. The terms are not mutually exclusive but one kind of thinking is productive and effective while the other is poisonous and unbalanced. Equating the president with Nazis may be emotionally satisfying but is so far beyond the pale of rationality that it pegs anyone who uses such a cockamamie analogy as ignorant and not seriously engaged in debate. Ignorant because it is painfully obvious that anyone who refers to any American politician, right or left, as a Nazi&#65533; hasn&#65533;t a clue what Hitler and his thugs believed; and not serious about debate because the epithet is used to stifle discussion rather than encourage it.

Similar attempts to paint the president as a &#65533;Communist&#65533; are equally paranoid and stupid. (Using the term &#65533;socialist&#65533; may seem more accurate but there too, it appears that there is a deliberate attempt to exaggerate the effect of the president&#65533;s policies and incorrectly define the term.)

I saw a lot of passionate opposition to the president&#65533;s policies at the tea party at the Capitol on Saturday. Most of it was spot on and based on patriotic notions of the constitution as well as a fierce desire to protect our liberties from the &#65533;common good&#65533; brigade of liberals who seek to promote policies that infringe upon our personal freedoms.

Were these protestors, who eschewed labeling Obama as dictator, or a Communist, or illegitimate because of his birth, any less passionate in their opposition than the paranoids who hold those beliefs?

I think it is demonstrable that they were not. The fire that burns in their bellies against the president's policies is no less bright, nor does their failure to join the kooks in their conspiracy theories mean that their commitment to the cause is any less total than those whose passion has allowed their thinking to spill over into the realm of the silly. To infer otherwise is not logical, nor is it very helpful.

"Passion" for a cause, by definition, engages the emotions and motivates one to act outside of themselves for a higher purpose. Those who believe that the president is wrongheaded, that his policies will lead to economic disaster, who can't abide Obama's prevarications, and see the enormous debt being piled on our children and grandchildren as preposterously unfair - without claiming the president wants to put his opponents in concentration camps - are channeling their opposition down a healthy, democratic path.

Not so much the paranoids. Despite evincing similar passion, all they are doing is giving the opposition the wherewithal to define all opponents to the president as crazies:

Amid a rebirth of conservative activism that could help Republicans win elections next year, some party insiders now fear that extreme rhetoric and conspiracy theories coming from the angry reaches of the conservative base are undermining the GOP's broader credibility and casting it as the party of the paranoid.

Such insiders point to theories running rampant on the Internet, such as the idea that Barack Obama was born in Kenya and is thus ineligible to be president, or that he is a communist, or that his allies want to set up Nazi-like detention camps for political opponents. Those theories, the insiders say, have stoked the GOP base and have created a "purist" climate in which a figure such as Rep. Joe Wilson (R-S.C.) is lionized for his "You lie!" outburst last week when Obama addressed Congress.

They are "wild accusations and the paranoid delusions coming from the fever swamps," said David Frum, a conservative author and speechwriter for President George W. Bush who is among the more vocal critics of the party base and of the conservative talk show hosts helping to fan the unrest.

"Like all conservatives, I am concerned about this administration's accumulation of economic power," Frum said. "Still, you have to be aware that there's a line where legitimate concerns begin to collapse into paranoid fantasy."

There was plenty of that on display at the 9/12 protest in Washington but a fair assessment of the tone and substance coming from the hundreds of thousands who were there would relegate the crazies and paranoids to a small, but significant minority. I would guess that up to a quarter of the protestors could be identified with those fringe elements. This is worrying but not as fatal as Obama supporters would have you believe. In some respects, the real problem is not so much their numbers, but their influence on mainstream politicians:

Insiders' criticisms have been dismissed by some conservative leaders, who argue that the party needs an energized base ' even if it's extreme ' to gain in future elections. Some analysts think that conservatives' summer revolt against Obama's healthcare agenda helped erode public approval of Democratic leadership enough that the GOP could pick up as many as 30 House seats next year.

Leaders in both the establishment and the base think that the tension could define the upcoming battle over the party's 2012 presidential nominee.

'There's a war going on, a pretty big one,' said Dan Riehl, a Virginia conservative whose popular blog, Riehl World View, has criticized those challenging the base. 'Many of us distrust the elite Republican establishment.'

Michael Goldfarb, a spokesman for John McCain's GOP presidential candidacy last year, likened the conservative fringe to liberal activists during the Bush years. The antiwar group Code Pink drew headlines, for example, when a protester with fake blood on her hands accosted then-Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice ' but Democrats still won elections later.

A little refresher course in recent history; in 2004, Democrats played with their own kooks, catering to many of their conspiracy theories, lionizing fringe players like Cindy Sheehan and Michael Moore, while trying to tap the 'enthusiasm' of the netroots - as bonkers as any conservative crazies we have today.

That worked out well for them, didn't it?

The point isn't necessarily to purge the paranoids, but to marginalize them and deny them influence in the party. I know that Dan Rheil is not a paranoid and that his anger - justified at times - directed against GOP and conservative 'elites' has both practical and ideological elements. But I think Dan would draw the line at some of the more paranoid beliefs held by those in the base and recognize the damage it does to reasonable, and wholly legitimate arguments against Obama and his agenda.

Passion does not equal paranoia. Those on the left who insist on equating 'anger' with psychosis do so knowing full well that the passions aroused by President Obama's policies take many forms and are not all outside the realm of legitimate debate. It is simply convenient for them to lump all opposition to the president as crazy, or 'racist.' And it plays well among their own base as well.

Accepting those who are passionate in their opposition to Obama without having arguments meander into the fever swamps of conspiracy and fear would lead to the more rational elements in the opposition to come to the fore while de-emphasizing the kooks. That can only lead to more effective resistance to the president's plans to "remake" America in an image none of us - kooks or rationalists - want to see become reality.

Chicago Tea Party Rally Draws Rightwing Kooks -- and Counter-Protesters

Last Thursday's Tea Party at Daley Plaza in Chicago drew about 1500 participants. Belying their alleged "grassroots" nature, the rally's organizers were heavily aided by pre-rally publicity in the corporate press -- including not only the inevitable wall-to-wall Fox News coverage, but also a front-page lead article in the Chicago Tribune.
2010-04-17-0001.TeaPartierlosingit.jpg

Tea Partier loses her sh-- while debating an anti-Tea Party counter-protester

Anti-war organizers who attempted to hold a rally on Daley Plaza a month before were met with demands by Daley Plaza management that they come up with a $2 million per incident insurance policy not only for themselves, but similar policies for each of their vendors. The insurance demands proved so onerous that anti-war organizers were forced to change the location of their rally.

But the "grassroots" Tea Partiers either came up with the millions of insurance coverage, or got privileged with a pass from Daley Plaza management authorities who refused to give same courtesy to anti-war organizers.

Even though in the weeks leading up to the rally, Tea Party organizers repeatedly told their supporters to leave their nuttier and racist signs at home, a number of kooks defied the organizers' attempts to clean up their movement's image.
2010-04-17-0002.Xenophobiaonparade.jpg

Xenophobia on parade

The lead speaker at their rally was former Republican primary gubernatorial candidate Adam Andrzejewski who, belying the Tea Partiers' claims of being against intrusive government, supports a constitutional amendment banning equal marriage rights for gays and lesbians.

And that's just the start of his bigoted agenda. Here is how Andrzejewski answered a candidates' questionnaire:

 Do you support civil unions or gay marriage in the state? Against

 Would you support a constitutional amendment to sanctify male/female marriage? Support

 Would you make Illinois a right to work state? Support

 Do you Support state funding for stem cell research? Against

 Are you for allowing sanctuary cities in Illinois? Against

 Are you for the moratorium on executions? End it [1]

Here's how he answered another questionnaire:

 [Are you for] Allowing and promoting Gay Straight Alliance Clubs and LGBTQ (lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender, queer) programs in taxpayer-funded schools? Oppose

In other words, Mr. anti-big government supports a government ban on certain students' organizations.

 [Are you for] Imposing Federal environmental restrictions on States and individuals? Oppose [2]

So when it comes to government controls on corporate behavior, he advocates ZERO environmental regulation!

Another of the Tea Partiers' prominent speakers was Kathy Barkulis. She's a big fan of racist blowhard Glenn Beck and writes of "the negative impact of illegal immigration on American citizens." [3]

On one of her blogs she posted a picture of Obama between Hitler and Lenin and wrote, "They hate America. They hate the U.S. Constitution. They hate individualism. The more I read about the backgrounds of the president's czars, the more I fear for the future of our country. This goes beyond Socialism. They are Communists, Marxists, and Anarchists. They are Collectivists. They hate capitalism. They hate successful individuals." [4]

Right wing conspiracy theories were well-represented.

A typical blog post is entitled, yes, in ALL CAPS, "COMMUNISTS IN THE WHITE HOUSE....WILL ANYONE STOP THIS ???????" [5]

Joe McCarthy, where are you now when we need you to tell us just how many communists there are in the State Department??

Besides an array of assorted right wing crackpots, the Tea Partiers drew at least a few Nazis, who apparently view the Tea Party movement as a potential recruiting ground. Here is one of them at Thursday's rally:
2010-04-17-0004.NeoNazi.jpg

And here is a YouTube video of the same Nazi - wearing the same ubber-patriotic shirt - speaking at a 2009 Hitler Birthday celebration with a portrait of Adolph Hitler behind him:

Fortunately there was a strong crowd of anti-war, pro-civil rights counter-protesters, both on one corner of the plaza and mingling on the edge of the Tea Partiers' rally.

Many left wing commentators have noted that the Tea Party movement has served as a "useful idiot" for the Republican Party and the portions of the big business elite whom they represent. This is true enough, and it should serve as a warning for how we need to oppose them.

If the left is seen as simply tools of the Democratic Party, we lose all credibility, and justifiably so. Moveon.org and other extensions of the Party are more interested in promoting the Party at all costs while paying lip service to the real hurt that many working people are feeling just days after the federal government released a new round of statistics announcing record foreclosures for the first quarter of 2010.

Yes, we must defend the Obama administration against the racist attacks of the Tea Partiers -- while also opposing Obama for the fact that he has done next to nothing for Blacks, Latinos, gays, immigrants and working people in general. Whatever happened to the bold promises of repealing or reforming NAFTA that Clinton and Obama dueled over in the run up to the Ohio primary? Or card check? And that's just the beginning of the list.

Almost all of Obama's promises to the left have been kicked into the second half of the first (only?) term of his Presidency, after the mid-term elections when the Democrats will then have the excuse that they do not have the power to enact their promises into law. By pushing the business elites' priorities -- the record bailout to the financial services industry and a maintenance and expansion of Bush-era empire building and attacks on civil liberties -- Obama has clearly "played" most of his supporters.

Like with Bill Clinton before him, it has been Obama's accommodations to the right, while taking the left for granted, that have fueled the rightward drift in Washington politics, where "health care reform" metamorphosizes into private health insurance industry preservation, with big fillips to anti-abortion nuts and a freeze on domestic spending along the way.

Our opposition to the Obama administration, while now far smaller than it needs to be, can only be effective if we return to the core demands of our movements -- demands that are not designed to give comfort to the administration, but to confront it for continuing the Neanderthal policies of its predecessors:

-- Concerned about the indebtedness of our children and future generations? Stop spending 57% of the federal budget on past and present wars.

-- "Si se puede" ("Yes we can") is not a cheap electoral slogan. Amnesty for all immigrants. They are working people like most of the rest of us, trying to eck out a living in hard times. We are idiots if we allow ourselves to be part of a divide-and-conquer strategy of our opponents trying to scapegoat immigrants for the lack of jobs and social services.

-- Full legal equality for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender people, including marriage rights and equal employment rights in government and the private sector.

... and these are just for starters ...

2791. The Kooky Right Wing Revisonist Myth Of "Liberal Fascism"

Fascist
noun
1. a person who believes in or sympathizes with fascism.
2. (often initial capital letter) a member of a fascist movement or party.
3. a person who is dictatorial or has extreme right-wing views.

http://dictionary.reference.com/browse/fascist

The right wing myth of Liberal Fascism is obscenely false and deliberately so, a fine example of the perversion of history coming from ?conservatives? these days - and that?s why we normal folk call them ?Wingnuts.?

Syndicalism is a potential substitute for the evils of capitalism, a reformed corporate system that depends on unions to overcome economic imbalances of the sort common in the American system, eventually leading to socialism. Mussolini?s shift from the left to militarism in fascism?s formative era was opposed by Italian socialists, including the Syndicalists, though a few leaders did throw in their support. This, however, is a far cry from ?Jimboo?s? statement above.

In fact, the foundation of Mussolini-style fascism is the military - labor unions are the perceived enemy of the Italian military-industrial model.

From ?Mussolini & Syndicalism,? by Tom Wetzel:

?Mussolini ? was developing the fascist ideology during the war years, he continued to advocate ?heroic action? but he now saw this in terms of military action rather than in terms of workers revolution ? Nonetheless, Mussolini got very little support from the working class for his new patriotic, pro-war position. Working people in Italy had seen too many instances of troops and cops being used to repress workers struggles to identify the military as ?theirs.? However, Mussolini did succeed in convincing the main leadership of the Italian Syndicalist Union (USI) of his patriotic position by early 1915. At the USI?s congress in 1915, its general secretary, Alceste de Ambris, and other leaders such as Filippo Corridoni, tried to sway the organization into a pro-war position. It is this event that gave rise to the myth of syndicalist support for Mussolini. ? ?

Apart from a few leaders who attempted to assist Il Duce, he had absolutely no support whatsoever from the Syndicalists. So it can not be said that he used the movement to advance his fascist ambitions ? but lies and myths are all ?conservatives? have these days to advance their own. Pity the liars of the right ? they are intellectually denuded and must cling to Goldbergian fantasies laced with Rush Limbaugh's manic-depressive ravings.

BTW, anyone who believes that Mussolini was a "devout communist" in 1926, as "Jimboo" does, is drudging through too many disingenuous Wingnut blogs and needs a decent therapist - preferably a liberal one. This was the very year that Il Duce declared Italy to be a far-right totalitarian nation - a fascist one. He traded in his communist principles for corporatism. The rest is history - but far-right stinkbug propaganda-meisters know very little about that -

Hatred is getting a lot of press this week as reports of violent harassment against Congressional Democrats continue to surface. It began last weekend with Tea Party activists shouting racist and bigoted comments at House Democrats during the final push for health care reform.

But new research shows the Tea Party may be the nice guys amid soaring numbers of hate groups.

An "astonishing" 363 anti-government or "Patriot" groups appeared in 2009, with the totals going from 149 groups to 512, according to a report released by the Southern Poverty Law Center.

That's a 244 percent increase in one year. Many of the "Patriot" groups are militias. Before 2009, there were 42. Now, there are 127. Hate groups overall stayed at a record high of nearly 1,000 despite the disintegration of one of the largest neo-Nazi groups in the country.

According to the SPLC, a non-profit dedicated to fighting intolerance, the numbers are cause for "grave concern."

Following the recent attack by right wing Muslim fundamentalists during the Christmas holidays, the Moscow bombings, several spree shootings, massacre by a right wing fundamentalist Muslim US Army Major, the shooting in the Holocaust museum by a right wing white supremacist and the Tiller murder (a doctor shot by a right winger in a church), rightists all over the country have been crying out for more bloodshed because they simply cannot accept the fact that a non white is President and his Chief of Staff is Jewish.

Homeland security warned us that rightists would fly out of control and the recent arrest of Hal Turner for uttering death threats and encouraging his followers (right wing NeoNazis) to commit murder, along with the aforementioned right wing terrorist attacks on innocent American citizens, reminds us that they were correct in their analysis. Will the Obama era be like the Clinton era, where though the attack by radical right wing Islamics was met with punishment of the perpetrators and no further attacks on American soil against citizens until Bush dropped the ball on 9/11/2001, the primary concern for American safety in the 1990s were the right wing militias, mass murderers like Tim McVeigh, Olympic stadium bomber Eric Rudolph and the Unabomber, all right wingers who spent their days attacking their fellow citizens because they were filled with hate of all things centrist and left. Add the Westboro Baptist Church, the American Nazi Party, The KKK and National Vanguard, and you have a cess pool of right wing maniacs ready to kill, kill, kill.

The right have destroyed this country, left its economy in a shambles and are doing nothing to fix it but obstruct the efforts of good men to help.

The recent murders are more proof of the festering, ugly bitterness of the right. Sore losers and nobodies with nothing to offer as a fix for the destroyed Bush economy but pathetic whining and bellyaching.

Like all rightists these days, fat lazy white GOP trash are self loathing defeatist and is having a melt down over Obama's popularity and success. It is obvious that the defeatist right want Obama to fail and the USA to burn, they're angry that Obama is undoing all the damaged caused by Bush and the Republicans. They're angry that McCain was crushed in the election, proving that the right is no longer relevant in American politics or business. They're angry that McCain failed and didn't get a chance to continue Bush's looting of the treasury, giving to the rich as gifts. They're angry that they didn't get to see this country burn. Rightists are for big government. Bush expanded government by over 30% before his first term ended. Fiscally irresponsible Republicans have almost destroyed America.

All they can do now is continue their vain efforts to obstruct the recovery, recovery from the damage they have caused. Some, including NeoCon David Frum, say that there will not be a republican house majority or a republican president for the next 20 years.

I couldn't agree more especially since 76-88MHz may be opening up in the US for radio broadcasting due to these frequencies proving poor for HDTV.

Because the presently made MLB-1 by Palomar Engineersis a UNUN for a longwire. The older transformer which I used (may have the original instruction paper somewhere) was a true BALUN. To build a T2FD we must use a balun, since it is a broadband dipole.

Buy the PAR Balun which has a Floating Ground connect the Floating Ground to the Coax Ground

IBOC is about 'morphing'* the existing FM Radio Band not replacing all at once with a new Technology or an new FM/UHF Band.

* Creating a natural Analog to Digital transition over a Decade or two as both Radio Listeners and Radio's in-service migrate from the old mode to the new mode.

A $300~$450 Option on a Car is NOT a Decent HD Radio System !?!

Yes better HD-Radios are needed . . .

=BUT= FM HD-Radio has done this with 1% of the Analog's 100% Power; and Analog still has 99% EFP.

What Happens : When FM HD-Radio has 10% of the Analog's 100% Power; and Analog is then down to 90% ?

-by- 2015~2020 most FM HD-Radio Stations will be at 15%~20% of the former Analog 100% and will be considering treminating the remaining 80% of the Analog Output because the Radio Listeners will no-longer be there . . .

That may apply for parts of the world currently expiriencing the so-

5960 kHz PNG ?Radio Fly? @ 10:40 UTC

"Radio Fly" from PNG on Shortwave 5960 kHz & 3915 kHz http://mt-shortwave.blogspot.com/2010/05/pngs-radio-fly-on-shortwave.html

Can't really say if this was Radio Fly or not.

Mumblings of 2 Men doing the Play-by-Play of either AUZ* Rules Football or Rugby form 10:40 to 10:59 UTC reception ended at 11:00.

* Both the male announcers sounded like Australians by their accents and the Play-by-Play seemed to be fast for Soccer.

Also 5960 kHz had one song at earlier ~10:35 UTC.

S-Meter : S0 and SIO : 1.5&2&1.5
At 11:00 CRI in English on 5955 kHz and the http://english.cri.cn/
5960 kHz Audio was gone CRI gave the TOH

OK Checked AFN Key West two days/nights in a row on 7812.5 kHz USB with no sound
-but- Fair Audio on 7811 kHz USB.

AFN Key West Transmission is Listed as 7812.5 kHz USB

However AFN Key West is heard on 7811 kHz USB and 1.5 kHz USB would put many SWL Listeners

the Listed 7812.5 kHz USB.

Actually AFN Key West Fixed this Listing once back in Jan 3 2008, 4:36 am

DX Ace - Now corrected to 7811:
http://myafn.dodmedia.osd.mil/ShortWave.aspx
-so- It would seem that AFN Key West has

A long wire balun should not assume you want a common ground connection on the input and output.

But I've look at the picture and description of the MLB-1 on the web and I agree it's far from clear what connections are provided.

However if I bought it and found it did have the grounds joined I'd return it as unacceptable because when using a long wire you want to use a separate good quality earth which is not joined to your receiver's earth which may have RF noise on it.

LOL, talk about a clueless law firm trying to extort a settlement out of someone. Who's the braniac that came up with this idea? Are they suing the semiconductor manufacturer who made the decoder chip, the radio manufacturer, the auto manufacturer, the radio stations that failed to add HD service, the radio stations that have HD but that didn't increase their power to the legal limit, the FCC for approving the HD system, or the company that licenses the technology to both the stations and the equipment manufacturers? Maybe add in the transmitter and antenna manufacturers for good measure. This just too funny.

There is one _big_ problem that HD Radio has been causing all over the country, but no one can sue anyone about it. Hardly a week goes by where you don't read of a format change where a station moves its classical or jazz or other niche format over to HD2, and changes their main format to something that they believe will increase their market share and let them charge more for advertising. Of course there's nothing to say that in the absence of HD that they would not simply abandon the niche format entirely.

On the surface, this sounds like a bad thing, but for those listeners willing to make the small one time investment in an HD Radio, it's actually a big positive for several reasons. First, they'll have a lot fewer commercials. Second, they'll have far better audio quality. Third, they'll experience no multipath interference. But for those unwilling to upgrade to HD Radio, they lose their favorite station and usually there is no competing analog station with which they can replace it. They either switch to CDs, an iPod or other portable music player, or listen to some other format.

HD Radio is not the perfect digital radio technology. It is a compromise solution for digital radio that required no additional spectrum or licenses. Adoption was fast by urban radio stations, but slow by consumers, mainly because of the free-fall in new car sales, caused by the recession. As Neil Glassman wrote at RBR.com, "...the introduction of HD Radio in the US met the perfect storm of roadblocks ï¿½ the decline of radio advertising, the recession and the failure of consumers to consider broadcast radio as an element to be included in their digital entertainment toy box." The recession will eventually end, advertising will pick up, and the "digital entertainment toy box" was dealt a major blow by AT&T with the elimination of unlimited data on the iPhone.

Broadcasters that got duped by false promises from iBiquity and that have lost revenue from IBLOCK interference are already getting involved. Sprint/Nextel had a direct link to my blog, yesterday. I have posted links to the law firm in most of the auto forums that had complaints about HD Radio. No more automakers will go near iBiquity, now, and I bet some drop their HD Radio offerings. Consumers are now becoming aware of this huge scam, and will not order HD Radio in automobiles. If you check these auto forums, delearships are getting bring-backs for "defective" HD radios. I see this potentially blowing up into a huge investigation and class-action suit from broadcasters and consumers. This will be the death of iBiquity. Here is what iBiquity promised the broadcasters:

"A Station Owner's View of HD Radio Industry"

"We were told back in the beginning that the HD coverage would be equal to the analog signal. Unfortunately, the industry is now finding out this is not the case... We've also found that even in a strong HD signal area, a dipole antenna is required... We were also told that the HD would lessen interference with adjacent channel signals. That also appears not to be the case. This is really very discouraging and is leading us to wonder why we should bother to promote HD. To do so will only disappoint, and, perhaps, antagonize a significant segment of the audience who finds that the system doesn't deliver."

I have. And didn't like it. Trouble is you keep referring to sound quality while you're talking about reception issues like multipath.

Reception can be better, while sound quality will not be better as long as second channels are being broadcast on HD.

Since you can't listen to it, you might want to actually read what some of the experts have said about HD sound quality, rather than believe the rantings of our favorite troll, or the opinions of those that have a vested interest in its failure.

Every review, by those without any vested interest in HD, has confirmed that the HD sound quality is far better than that of analog FM. It could be that they did not find that perfect FM station and that they did not listen to it with the perfect analog receiver hooked up to the perfect antenna. A lot has to do with the quality of the broadcast, both for digital and analog, but it's a lot easier to do a high quality digital broadcast.

It's similar to analog LPs versus digital CDs. With a high end turntable, and an LP that is in perfect condition with no warpage or scratches, the LP could conceivably sound better. But that's not representative of most people's equipment.

As Consumer Reports stated:

"Digital HD Radio has the potential to deliver better sound quality than the usual analog FM and AM radio, with deeper bass, more extended treble, more stereo separation, and greater dynamic range (the difference between the loudest and quietest sounds). The actual quality depends on what the radio station transmits and how good a job the tuner does with it.

In our tests of the HDT-1 tuner in the New York metropolitan region, the HD FM and AM broadcasts generally sounded clearer and fuller than analog content from the same station. All of the HD FM broadcasts, whether the main channel or the "side" channels multicast on the same frequency, were free of background noise--the hiss or crackle you occasionally hear with standard radio. The better-quality broadcasts had frequency response, detail, separation, and dynamic range that approached audio CD quality. HD AM programs were received in stereo with audio quality comparable to standard analog FM radio, minus the background noise."

The last sentense says it exactly. And did hey use just one digital channel on the HD part of the system? At 96k it will sound better than FM. At half that rate it will not.

Obama makes Jewish Passover ritual a White House tradition,

Next Year in the White House: A Seder Tradition
The New York Times; March 27, 2010

WASHINGTON -- One evening in April 2008, three low-level staff members from the Obama presidential campaign -- a baggage handler, a videographer and an advance man -- gathered in the windowless basement of a Pennsylvania hotel for an improvised Passover Seder.

The day had been long, the hour was late, and the young men had not been home in months. So they had cadged some matzo and Manischewitz wine, hoping to create some semblance of the holiday.

Suddenly they heard a familiar voice. "Hey, is this the Seder?" Barack Obama asked, entering the room.

Obama reaffirms US promise to maintain Zionist 'nuclear opacity,' vows to step up US-Israeli nuclear cooperation
Wednesday, August 04 2010 @ 12:10 AM BST

'Obama agrees to keep Israel's nukes secret'
The Washington Times (US); October 2, 2009

President Obama has reaffirmed a 4-decade-old secret understanding that has allowed Israel to keep a nuclear arsenal without opening it to international inspections, three officials familiar with the understanding said.

The officials, who spoke on the condition that they not be named because they were discussing private conversations, said Mr. Obama pledged to maintain the agreement when he first hosted Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu at the White House in May.

Under the understanding, the US has not pressured Israel to disclose its nuclear weapons or to sign the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), which could require Israel to give up its estimated several hundred nuclear bombs.

Who's behind Obama's rise to stardom? (You guessed it!)
Monday, August 17 2009 @ 07:16 PM BST

American Free Press August 17, 2009 By Victor Thorn

Is Barack Obama the product of a vast socialist conspiracy designed to undermine the fundamental tenets established by our Founding Fathers, all bankrolled and organized by elite financiers? The answer is unequivocally yes.

To deconstruct this labyrinth-like network, one must start at the top with global slash and burn speculator George Soros and his ties to the world's most powerful banking family. Journalist, historian and economic researcher William Engdahl sets the stage.

"Soros has been identified as a front man for the Rothschild banking group. Understandably, neither he nor the Rothschilds wants this important fact to be public." He continues, "Soros's connection to the ultra-secret international finance circles of the Rothschilds is not just an ordinary or accidental banking connection."

Finally, in a November 1, 1996 article, Engdahl writes, "From the very first days when Soros created his own investment fund in 1969, he owed his success to his relation to the Rothschild family banking network."

Obama pledges to confront Holocaust deniers
Wednesday, April 29 2009 @ 11:39 PM BST

AFP April 23, 2009

WASHINGTON -- At a ceremony Thursday remembering millions of Jews [allegedly] slaughtered in World War II, President Barack Obama reaffirmed the strong US bond with Israel and vowed to confront Holocaust deniers.

"There are those who insist the Holocaust never happened, who perpetrate every form of intolerance -- racism, anti-Semitism, homophobia, xenophobia, sexism and more," Obama told a gathering in the Capitol Rotunda organized by the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum.

"We have an opportunity and an obligation to confront these scourges," Obama said.

Elder of Zion
Kissinger calls Obama "important element" in "new world order"
Tuesday, March 03 2009 @ 05:53 PM GMT

The world must forge a new order or retreat to chaos By Henry Kissinger
The Independent (UK) January 20, 2009

As the new U.S. administration prepares to take office amid grave financial and international crises, it may seem counterintuitive to argue that the very unsettled nature of the international system generates a unique opportunity for creative diplomacy.

That opportunity involves a seeming contradiction. On one level, the financial collapse represents a major blow to the standing of the United States. While American political judgments have often proved controversial, the American prescription for a world financial order has generally been unchallenged. Now disillusionment with the United States' management of it is widespread.

Rothschild agents take key posts in Obama admin
Monday, March 02 2009 @ 09:53 PM GMT

American Free Press February 23, 2009

Our greatest founding father and first president, George Washington, probably wouldn't be ready to celebrate his birthday on Feb. 22 if he were alive today. Having led the 13 colonies to independence from the British Empire in 1783, following the course of a difficult eight-year struggle by those freedom-loving American colonists who followed him, Washington (who lived from 1732 to 1799) would most assuredly be appalled to see that the liberties achieved from the American Revolution are now being flagrantly defied by a number of figures who populate the upper ranks of the administration of Barack Obama.

Six former Rhodes Scholars (educated at Oxford University in Britain) and four others associated with the London School of Economics are serving in key posts in the Obama administration. That's not good.

President-Elect Obama flunks Gaza test
Thursday, January 08 2009 @ 04:02 PM GMT

Inter Press Service (IPS) January 6, 2009

CAIRO -- With the Israeli assault on the Gaza Strip now in its second week -- and as the Palestinian death toll approaches 600 -- U.S. president-elect Barack Obama has continued to remain silent. Obama's reticence, say Egyptian commentators, indicates that he will be no more even-handed on the issue of Palestine than preceding U.S. administrations.

"Obama's silence shows he is just as biased towards Israel as outgoing U.S. President George Bush," Ibrahim Mansour, political analyst and managing editor-in-chief of independent daily Al-Dustour told IPS. "Like Bush, Obama's only role in the region will be to implement Israeli directives."

Obamas live under shadow of influential synagogue
Sunday, November 30 2008 @ 04:03 PM GMT

Obama's Home Shul The Jewish Daily Forward November 26, 2008

CHICAGO -- On a recent Sunday afternoon at a historic Chicago synagogue, the sanctuary was packed but the mood was restrained: A longtime congregant had died, and about 300 people had turned out for his funeral service. But amid the solemnity, the occasional mourner discreetly pulled loved ones out to the synagogue's front steps to snap cell phone pictures of a large brick house, mostly obscured by shrubs, across the street.

Such scenes have become commonplace in recent months at KAM-Isaiah Israel, a Reform congregation in the Hyde Park neighborhood. The dome of the historic Byzantine-style synagogue looms over the red-brick house where Barack Obama has lived for the past three years, and from which he made the short trip across the street to deliver an early political speech to a Jewish crowd.

Chicago Jews call Obama "first Jewish president"
Sunday, November 23 2008 @ 03:06 PM GMT

Haaretz (Israel) November 13, 2008

Quite a few of Barack Obama's "friends from the past" have popped up recently. It's doubtful whether he even knows their names, but in the Chicago Jewish community many people really are long-time friends of the president-elect.

Some of the older people in the community say that they "raised him," while others half-jokingly call Obama "the first Jewish president."

Top Obama advisor has long ties to Neocons
Friday, November 07 2008 @ 02:28 PM GMT

Inter Press Service (IPS) November 2, 2008

With the 2008 presidential campaign at its end, pundits have begun to discuss in earnest what expected winner Barack Obama's administration might look like. An important piece of evidence is Obama's campaign team, which largely escaped the harsh scrutiny that his opponent's lobbyist-laden team received.

Because of Obama's relative inexperience on foreign policy, it is this part of his team that is getting much of the attention, and one adviser in particular -- Dennis Ross, Bill Clinton's Mideast envoy whose record includes supporting the pro-Iraq War advocacy campaigns of the Project for the New American Century and serving as a consultant to the Washington Institute for Near East Policy (WINEP), a bastion of Israel-centric policy thinking in Washington.

A day after his historic election to become the first black American president, Barack Obama stepped into the role of president-elect yesterday, inviting Rahm Emanuel to join his officials said.

Emanuel, a former Bill Clinton adviser, is the son of a

Arabs Despair of Zionist influence on Washington

Inter-Press Service (IPS) July 31, 2008

For decades, the U.S. has jealously guarded its role of sole arbiter of the Arab-Israeli dispute. In light of recent shows of support for Israel by U.S. presidential hopeful Barack Obama, however, many Arabs fear that Zionist influence on the U.S. body politic -- across the political Struble has many of these media groups in his back-pocket, just like less reliably in moving vehicles. It's over, especially with

Oh the same old story.
I don't need to read reviews to tell me that 40k is not going to sound good.

Perhaps if you want to let us know what HD-Radio sounds like, perhaps you could upload a few samples. Connect a radio to a computer, record the sound, encode it into FLAC format, and upload it.

Although if 40k can produce good sound quality, I'd be about as surprised as I would be if somebody made a good cup of tea in a Chocolate Tea Pot.

Also, it's possible that they may be using excessive levels of dynamic compression on some of the FM broadcasts. If so, that doesn't mean that HD-Radio OK, it just means that FM is sometimes used very badly.

Liberty Net: August 28, 2010

http://3950.net/2010/09/liberty-net-august-28-2010/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

CONDITIONS were excellent and the longest-running discussion net on amateur radio, the Liberty Net, did itself proud once again with in-depth discussions and debate about the political, social, and economic issues that will determine the future of our civilization.

Hereï¿½s a small sample of the items discussed this week on amateur radioï¿½s most exciting net:

ï¿½ A four-year-old girl was running a lemonade stand in front of her house ï¿½ until the ï¿½authoritiesï¿½ descended upon her, shutting her down for not having the required permits, paying taxes, and filling out the requisite forms. The ï¿½officersï¿½ who participated in this outrage would have refused to obey such orders ï¿½ if they had had a single molecule of integrity. (9 minutes)

ï¿½ The DEA is now looking to hire nine full-time ï¿½Ebonics speakersï¿½ to translate monitored telephone calls. Salaries begin at $79,000 per year. (39 minutes)

ï¿½ Government studies indicate that Blacks are far more verbose than Whites, talking almost twice as much in any given time period. (40 minutes)

ï¿½ Had the cartoon character Homer Simpson been running against John McCain, it would have been morally incumbent upon Arizona voters to vote for Simpson. So why did McCain win the primary? Or did he? (47 minutes)

ï¿½ Why has faux conservative Glenn Beck decided that President Andrew Jackson ï¿½ possibly the greatest patriot since Jefferson, and a fervent and effective opponent of the banking oligarchs ï¿½ is a bad guy? (53 minutes)

ï¿½ America does need a patriotic resistance to the regime in Washington, but itï¿½s a tragedy that oligarch Rupert Murdochï¿½s employee, Glenn Beck, has anything to do with it. (1 hour 15 minutes)

ï¿½ The food contamination affecting eggs recently had one upside: It revealed the horrible conditions in which helpless animals are forced to live. (1 hour 17 minutes)

ï¿½ Ron Paul has announced that he will again introduce a bill to audit the gold supposedly held in Fort Knox. System politiicians have always torpedoed the audit in the past ï¿½ and one wonders why. (1 hour 24 minutes)

ï¿½ As the economy fails ï¿½ and the regime in Washington responds with ever-stricter taxes and controls ï¿½ will Americans break free, as Argentinians did, by using barter and precious metal coins? (1 hour 40 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to the Liberty Net right now on your computer ï¿½ or download the file and listen on your portable mp3 player. And N2SAG operates a live feed and chat during Net times that lets you make an end run around jammers and a fickle ionosphere.

Join in or listen to the most exciting net on the amateur bands every Saturday night ï¿½ within 10 kHz or so of 3950 SSB, starting at 10PM Eastern Time.

Our thanks go to W1WCR for his hard work and courage in keeping an important part of the amateur radio service alive since 1974!

I disagree. Use on an UnUn (autotransformer) puts all points of the system at ground, provided you ground per electrical code. "Noise" from the radio chassis (?) flows to ground through the IEC cable. Static charges from the antenna system flow to ground at the transmission line point of entry.

Very true,but the interference won't allow appropriate low-noise reception at my location. I have to use coax.

MLB-1 from Palomar is probably (I would rate that at 99%) their answer to the MLB from RF Systems in the Netherlands. I still have the latter and it has only one connection for the antenna on the top. P.S.
Just checked back Palomar's website and a true 9:1 balun kit is still available,but it is made for transmitting up to 250W,not for SWL and does not have any enclosure box. And it is certainly much bigger and heavier than the old one I originally used for T2FD.

My own cell-phone generates more noise than some of the cold war era jammers,sometimes! That is another reason for using coax. And grounding may bring more problems,sometimes it is better not to ground. Static usually is not a major issue over here at my lattitude (40* N).

You typed:

"many communists are atheists, and SOME atheists are communists. But the latter is pretty much NOT the case in the USA."

There are two items to consider in the first sentence. You refer to the LATTER of the TWO items. That LATTER portion says "some atheists are communists". Then you claim that is NOT the case in the USA.

The opposing case would be that MOST atheists in the USA ARE atheists.
You were comparing ratios and numbers with the words 'many' and 'some'. When we look at the opposite, it has to be the numbers/ratio that are inverted.

Learn to write clearly. That means without ambiguity.

Kevin MacDonald's The Culture of Critique

Reviewed by Stanley Hornbeck

In The Culture of Critique, Kevin MacDonald advances a carefully researched but extremely controversial thesis: that certain 20th century intellectual movements -- largely established and led by Jews -- have changed European societies in fundamental ways and destroyed the confidence of Western man. He claims that these movements were designed, consciously or unconsciously, to advance Jewish interests even though they were presented to non-Jews as universalistic and even utopian. He concludes that the increasing dominance of these ideas has had profound political and social consequences that benefited Jews but caused great harm to gentile societies. This analysis, which he makes with considerable force, is an unusual indictment of a people generally thought to be more sinned against than sinning.

The Culture of Critique is the final title in Prof. MacDonald's massive, three-volume study of Jews and their role in history. The two previous volumes are A People That Shall Dwell Alone and Separation and its Discontents, published by Praeger in 1994 and 1998. The series is written from a sociobiological perspective that views Judaism as a unique survival strategy that helps Jews compete with other ethnic groups. Prof. MacDonald, who is a psychologist at the University of California at Long Beach, explains this perspective in the first volume, which describes Jews as having a very powerful sense of uniqueness that has kept them socially and genetically separate from other peoples. The second volume traces the history of Jewish-gentile relations, and finds the causes of anti-Semitism primarily in the almost invariable commercial and intellectual dominance of gentile societies by Jews and in their refusal to assimilate. The Culture of Critique brings his analysis into the present century, with an account of the Jewish role in the radical critique of traditional culture.

The intellectual movements Prof. MacDonald discusses in this volume are Marxism, Freudian psychoanalysis, the Frankfurt school of sociology, and Boasian anthropology. Perhaps most relevant from a racial perspective, he also traces the role of Jews in promoting multi-culturalism and Third World immigration. Throughout his analysis Prof. MacDonald reiterates his view that Jews have promoted these movements as Jews and in the interests of Jews, though they have often tried to give the impression that they had no distinctive interests of their own. Therefore Prof. MacDonald's most profound charge against Jews is not ethnocentrism but dishonesty -- that while claiming to be working for the good of mankind they have often worked for their own good and to the detriment of others. While attempting to promote the brotherhood of man by dissolving the ethnic identification of gentiles, Jews have maintained precisely the kind of intense group solidarity they decry as immoral in others.

Celebrating Diversity
Prof. MacDonald claims that one of the most consistent ways in which Jews have advanced their interests has been to promote pluralism and diversity -- but only for others. Ever since the 19th century, they have led movements that tried to discredit the traditional foundations of gentile society: patriotism, racial loyalty, the Christian basis for morality, social homogeneity, and sexual restraint. At the same time, within their own communities, and with regard to the state of Israel, they have often supported the very institutions they attack in gentile society.

Why is this in the interests of Jews? Because the parochial group loyalty characteristic of Jews attracts far less attention in a society that does not have a cohesive racial and cultural core. The Jewish determination not to assimilate fully, which accounts for their survival as a people for thousands for years -- even without a country -- has invariably attracted unpleasant and even murderous scrutiny in nations with well -defined national identities. In Prof. MacDonald's view it is therefore in the interest of Jews to dilute and weaken the identity of any people among whom they live. Jewish identity can flower in safety only when gentile identity is weak.

Prof. MacDonald quotes a remarkable passage from Charles Silberman: "American Jews are committed to cultural tolerance because of their belief -- one firmly rooted in history -- that Jews are safe only in a society acceptant of a wide range of attitudes and behaviors, as well as a diversity of religious and ethnic groups. It is this belief, for example, not approval of homosexuality, that leads an overwhelming majority of American Jews to endorse 'gay rights' and to take a liberal stance on most other so-called 'social' issues."

He is saying, in effect, that when Jews make the diversity-is-our-strength argument it is in support of their real goal of diluting a society's homogeneity so that Jews will feel safe. They are couching a Jewish agenda in terms they think gentiles will accept. Likewise, as the second part of the Silberman quotation suggests, Jews may support deviant movements, not because they think it is good for the country but because it is good for the Jews.

Prof. Silberman also provides an illuminating quote from a Jewish economist who thought that republicans had more sensible economic policies but who voted for the Democratic presidential candidate anyway. His reason? "I'd rather live in a country governed by the faces I saw at the Democratic convention than those I saw at the Republican convention." This man apparently distrusts white gentiles and voted for a racially mixed party even if its economic policies were wrong. What is good for Jews appears to come before what is good for the country.

Earl Raab, former president of heavily Jewish Brandeis University makes the diversity argument in a slightly different way. Expressing his satisfaction with the prediction that by the middle of the next century whites will become a minority, he writes, "We have tipped beyond the point where a Nazi-Aryan party will be able to prevail in this country." He is apparently prepared to displace the people and culture of the founding stock in order to prevent the theoretical rise of an anti-Jewish regime. Prof. Raab appears to see whites mainly as potential Nazis, and is willing to sacrifice their culture and national continuity in order to defuse an imagined threat to Jews. This passage takes for granted the continued future existence of Jews as a distinct community even as gentile whites decline in numbers and influence.

In the same passage, Prof. Raab continues by noting that, "[w]e [Jews] have been nourishing the American climate of opposition to bigotry for about half a century. That climate has not yet been perfected, but the heterogeneous nature of our population tends to make it irreversible..." -- just as it tends to make the ultimate displacement of European culture also irreversible.

Prof. MacDonald traces the development of this diversity strategy to several sources. It is widely recognized that the German-Jewish immigrant Franz Boas (1858-1942) almost single-handedly established the current contours of anthropology, ridding it of all biological explanations for differences in human culture or behavior. Prof. MacDonald reports that he and his followers -- with the notable exceptions of Margaret Mead and Ruth Benedict -- were all Jews with strong Jewish identities: "Jewish identification and the pursuit of perceived Jewish interests, particularly in advocating an ideology of cultural pluralism as a model for Western societies, has been the 'invisible subject' of American anthropology."

By 1915, Boas and his students controlled the American Anthropological Association and by 1926 they headed every major American university anthropology department. From this position of dominance they promoted the idea that race and biology are trivial matters, and that environment counts for everything. They completely recast anthropology so as to provide intellectual support for open immigration, integration, and miscegenation. They also laid the foundation for the idea that because all races have the same potential, the failures of non-whites must be blamed exclusively on white oppression. The ultimate conclusion of Boasian anthropology was that since environment accounts for all human differences, every inequality in achievement can be eliminated by changing the environment. This has been the justification for enormous and wasteful government intervention programs.

The entire "civil rights" movement can be seen as a natural consequence of the triumph of Boasian thinking. Since all races were equivalent, separation was immoral. The color line also sharpened white self-consciousness in ways that might make whites more aware of Jewish parochialism. Thus it was, according to Prof. MacDonald, that Jews almost single-handedly launched the desegregation movement. Without the leadership of Jews, the NAACP might never have been established, and until 1975 every one of its presidents was a Jew. Prof. MacDonald reports that in 1917, when the black separatist Marcus Garvey visited NAACP headquarters, he saw so many white faces that he stormed out, complaining that it was a white organization.

Prof. MacDonald concludes that the efforts of Jews were crucial to the "civil rights" transformation of America. He quotes a lawyer for the American Jewish Congress who claims that "many of these [civil rights] laws were actually written in the offices of Jewish agencies by Jewish staff people, introduced by Jewish legislators and pressured into being by Jewish voters."

While the Boas school was promoting integration and racial equivalence, it was also critical of, in Prof. MacDonald's words, "American culture as overly homogeneous, hypocritical, emotionally and aesthetically repressive (especially with regard to sexuality). Central to this program was creating ethnographies of idyllic [Third-World] cultures that were free of the negatively perceived traits that were attributed to Western culture."

The Role of the anthropologist became one of criticizing everything about Western society while glorifying everything primitive. Prof. MacDonald notes that Boasian portrayals of non-Western peoples deliberately ignored barbarism and cruelty or simply attributed it to contamination from the West. He sees this as a deliberate attempt to undermine the confidence of Western societies and to make them permeable to Third World influences and people. Today, this view is enshrined in the dogma that America must remain open to immigration because immigrants bring spirit and energy that natives somehow lack.

Authoritarian Personalities
In order to open European-derived societies to the immigration that would transform them, it was necessary to discredit racial solidarity and commitment to tradition. Prof. MacDonald argues that this was the basic purpose of a group of intellectuals known as the Frankfurt School. What is properly known as the Institute of Social Research was founded in Frankfurt, Germany, during the Weimar period by a Jewish millionaire but was closed down by the Nazis shortly after they took power. Most of its staff emigrated to the United States and the institute reconstituted itself at UC Berkeley. The organization was headed by Max Horkheimer, and its most influential members were T.W. Adorno, Erich Fromm, and Herbert Marcuse, all of whom had strong Jewish identities. Horkheimer made no secret of the partisan nature of the institute's activities: "Research would be able here to transform itself directly into propaganda," he wrote. (Italics in the original)

Prof. MacDonald devotes many pages to an analysis of The Authoritarian Personality, which was written by Adorno and appeared in 1950. It was part of a series called Studies in Prejudice, produced by the Frankfurt school, which included titles like Anti-Semitism and Emotional Disorder. The Authoritarian Personality, which was particularly influential because, according to Prof. MacDonald, the American Jewish Committee heavily funded its promotion and because Jewish academics took up its message so enthusiastically.

The book's purpose is to make every group affiliation sound as if it were a sign of mental disorder. Everything from patriotism to religion to family -- and race -- loyalty are sign of a dangerous and defective "authoritarian personality." Because drawing distinctions between different groups is illegitimate, all group loyalties -- even close family ties! -- are "prejudice." As Christopher Lasch has written, the book leads to the conclusion that prejudice "could be eradicated only by subjecting the American people to what amounted to collective psychotherapy -- by treating them as inmates of an insane asylum."

But according to Prof. MacDonald it is precisely the kind of group loyalty, respect for tradition, and consciousness of differences central to Jewish identity that Horkheimer and Adorno described as mental illness in gentiles. These writers adopted what eventually became a favorite Soviet tactic against dissidents: Anyone whose political views were different from theirs was insane. As Prof. MacDonald explains, the Frankfurt school never criticized or even described Jewish group identity -- only that of gentiles: "behavior that is critical to Judaism as a successful group evolutionary strategy is conceptualized as pathological in gentiles."

For these Jewish intellectuals, anti-Semitism was also a sign of mental illness: They concluded that Christian self-denial and especially sexual repression caused hatred of Jews. The Frankfurt school was enthusiastic about psycho-analysis, according to which "Oedipal ambivalence toward the father and anal-sadistic relations in early childhood are the anti-Semite's irrevocable inheritance."

In addition to ridiculing patriotism and racial identity, the Frankfurt school glorified promiscuity and Bohemian poverty. Prof. MacDonald sees the school as a seminal influence: "Certainly many of the central attitudes of the largely successful 1960s countercultural revolution find expression in The Authoritarian Personality, including idealizing rebellion against parents, low-investment sexual relationships, and scorn for upward social mobility, social status, family pride, the Christian religion, and patriotism."

Of the interest here, however, is the movement's success in branding ancient loyalties to nation and race as mental illnesses. Although he came later, the French-Jewish "deconstructionist" Jacques Derrida was in the same tradition when he wrote:

"The idea behind deconstruction is to deconstruct the workings of strong nation-states with powerful immigration policies, to deconstruct the rhetoric of nationalism, the politics of place, the metaphysics of native land and native tongue... The idea is to disarm the bombs... of identity that nation-states build to defend themselves against the stranger, against Jews and Arabs and immigrants... "

As Prof. MacDonald puts it, "Viewed at its most abstract level, a fundamental agenda is thus to influence the European-derived peoples of the United States to view concern about their own demographic and cultural eclipse as irrational and as an indication of psychopathology." Needless to say, this project has been successful; anyone opposed to the displacement of whites is routinely treated as a mentally unhinged "hate-monger," and whenever whites defend their group interests they are described as psychologically inadequate. The irony has not escaped Prof. MacDonald: "The ideology that ethnocentrism was a form of psychopathology was promulgated by a group that over its long history had arguably been the most ethnocentric group among all the cultures of the world."

Immigration
Prof. MacDonald argues that it is entirely natural for Jews to promote open immigration. It brings about the "diversity" Jews find comforting and it keeps America open to persecuted co-religionists throughout the world. He says Jews are the only group that has always fought for mass immigration; a few European ethnic organizations have made sporadic efforts to make it easier for their own people to come, but only Jews have consistently promoted open borders for all comers. Moreover, whatever disagreements they may have had on other issues, Jews of every political persuasion have favored high immigration.

This, too, goes back many years, and Prof. MacDonald traces in considerable detail the sustained Jewish pro-immigration effort. Israel Zangwill, author of the eponymous 1908 play The Melting Pot, was of the view that "there is only one way to World Peace, and that is the absolute abolition of passports, visas, frontiers, custom houses... " He was nevertheless an ardent Zionist and disapproved of Jewish intermarriage.

Although the statue of liberty, properly known as Liberty Enlightening the World, was a gift to the United States from France as a tribute to American political traditions, the sonnet by the Jewish Emma Lazarus helped change it into a symbol of immigration. Affixed to the base of the statue several decades after its construction, the poem welcomes to America "huddled masses yearning to breath free/The wretched refuse of your teeming shore."

Prof. MacDonald has discovered that implausible arguments about diversity being a quintessentially American strength have been made by Jews for a long time. He reports that in 1948 the American Jewish Committee was urging Congress to believe that "Americanism is the spirit behind the welcome that America has traditionally extended to people of all races, all religions, all nationalities." Of course, there had never been such a tradition. In 1952, the American Jewish Congress argued in hearings on immigration that "our national experience has confirmed beyond a doubt that our very strength lies in the diversity of our peoples." This, too, was at a time when U.S. immigration law was still explicitly designed to maintain a white majority.

It is often said that when the old immigration policy was scrapped in 1965, scarcely anyone knew, and no one predicted, that the new law would change the racial makeup of the country. Prof. MacDonald disputes this, arguing that this had been the objective of Jewish groups from the beginning.

Prof. MacDonald finds that Jews have been the foremost advocates of immigration in England, France, and Canada, and that Jewish groups were the most vocal opponents of independence for Quebec. Australian Jews led the effort to dismantle the "white Australia" policy, one reason for which was cited in an editorial in the Australian Jewish Democrat: "The strengthening of multi-cultural or diverse Australia is also our most effective insurance policy against anti-Semitism. The day Australia has a Chinese Australian Governor General I would feel more confident of my freedom to live as a Jewish Australian." Like Earl Raab writing about the United States, this Australian Jew is prepared to sacrifice the traditional culture, people, and identity of Australia to specifically Jewish interests. It would not be surprising if such an openly expressed objective did not have the opposite effect from the intended, and increase anti-Jewish sentiment.

Jews and the Left
It is well known that Jews have been traditionally associated with the left, and Prof. MacDonald investigates this connection in some detail. Historically it was understandable that Jews should support movements that advocated overthrowing the existing order. After emancipation, Jews met resistance from gentile elites who did not want to lose ground to competitors, and outsiders easily become revolutionaries. However, in Prof. MacDonald's view, Jewish commitment to leftist causes has often been motivated by the hope that communism, especially, would be a tool for combating anti-Semitism, and by expectation that universalist social solutions would be yet another way to dissolve gentile loyalties that might exclude Jews. The appeal of univeralist ideologies is tied to the implicit understanding that Jewish particularism will be exempt:

"At the extreme, acceptance of a universalist ideology by gentiles would result in gentiles not perceiving Jews as in a different social category at all, while nonetheless Jews would be able to maintain a strong personal identity as Jews."

Prof. MacDonald argues that Jews had specifically Jewish reasons for supporting the Bolshevik revolution. Czarist Russia was notorious for its anti-Semitic policies and, during its early years, the Soviet Union seemed to be the promised land for Jews: it ended state anti-Semitism, tried to eradicate Christianity, opened opportunities to individual Jews, and preached a "classless" society in which Jewishness would presumably attract no negative attention. Moreover, since Marxism taught that all conflict was economic rather than ethnic, many Jews believed it heralded the end of anti-Semitism.

Prof. MacDonald emphasizes that although Jewish Communists preached both atheism and the solidarity of the world's working people, they took pains to preserve a distinct, secular Jewish identity. He reports that Lenin himself (who had one Jewish grandparent) approved the continuation of an explicitly Jewish identity under Communism, and in 1946 the Communist Party of the United States voted a resolution also supporting Jewish peoplehood in Communist countries. Thus, although Communism was supposed to be without borders or religion, Jews were confident that it would make a place for their own group identity. He writes that despite the official view that all men were to be brothers, "very few Jews lost their Jewish identity during the entire soviet era."

Jewish Communists sometimes betrayed remarkable particularism. Prof. MacDonald quotes Charles Pappoport, the French Communist leader: "The Jewish people [are] the bearer of all the great ideas of unity and human community in history... The disappearance of the Jewish people would signify the death of humankind, the final transformation of man into a wild beast." This seems to attribute to Jews an elite position incompatible with "unity and human community."

Prof. MacDonald argues that many Jews began to fall away from Communism only after Stalin showed himself to be anti-Semitic. And just as Jews had been the leading revolutionaries in anti-Semitic pre-Revolutionary Russia, Jews became the leading dissidents in an anti-Semitic Soviet Union. A similar pattern can be found in the imposed Communist governments of Eastern Europe, which were largely dominated by Jews. The majority of the leaders of the Polish Communist Party, for example, spoke better Yiddish than Polish, and they too maintained a strong Jewish identity. After the fall of Communism many stopped being Polish and emigrated to Israel.

Prof. MacDonald writes that in Bela Kun's short-lived 1919 Communist government of Hungary, 95 percent of the leaders were Jews, and that at the time of the 1956 uprising Communism was so closely associated with Jews that the rioting had almost the flavor of a pogrom. He argues that in the United States as well, the hard core among Communists and members of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) was mainly Jewish. Here, too, a revolutionary, atheist, and universalist world-view was fully compatible with strong identification as Jews. Prof. MacDonald quotes from a study of American leftists:

"Many Communists, for example, state that they could never have married a spouse who was not a leftist. When Jews were asked if they could have married Gentiles, many hesitated, surprised by the question, and found it difficult to answer. Upon reflection, many concluded that they had always taken marriage to someone Jewish for granted." Their commitment as Jews was even more fundamental and unexamined than their commitment to the left.

Prof. MacDonald reports that many American Jews also abandoned Communism as it became increasingly anti-Semitic. For a large number, the Soviet Union's severing of diplomatic ties with Israel during the 1967 war was the last straw. A former SDS activist no doubt spoke for many when he explained, "If I must choose between the Jewish cause and a 'progressive' anti-Israel SDS, I shall choose the Jewish cause. If barricades are erected, I will fight as a Jew." According to Prof. MacDonald, American neoconservatism can also be described as a surface shift in external politics that leaves the more fundamental commitment to Jewish identity unchanged. Thus, former leftists abandoned an ideology that had turned against Israel and refashioned American conservatism into a different movement, the one unshakable theme of which was support for Israel. Neoconservatives also support high levels of immigration and were active in excluding white racial identification from the "respectable" right.

Objections
There are many possible objections to Prof. MacDonald's thesis. The first is that it is largely built on the assumption that Jews are dishonest. It is always risky to assume one understands the motives of others better than they do themselves. Jews have traditionally thought of themselves as a benevolent presence, even as a "light unto the nations" or a "chosen people." This is echoed today in the Jewish self image as champions of the excluded and the oppressed. Most of the time what passes for "social justice" has the effect of undermining the traditions and loyalties of gentile society, but are Jews deliberately undermining these things rather than righting what they perceive to be wrongs?

Prof. MacDonald concedes that many Jews are sincere in their support for liberal causes, but then escalates his indictment by arguing that "the best deceivers are those who deceive themselves." In other words, many Jews who are actually working for Jewish interests have first convinced themselves otherwise. A Jew who mainly wants America to become less white may also have convinced himself that America benefits from a multitude of cultures. Having convinced himself he can more effectively convince others.

Many Jews, Prof. MacDonald argues, are not even conscious of the extent to which their Jewishness is central to their identities or their political views. He quotes Rabbi Abraham Joshua Heschel on his surprise at how passionately he embraced the Israeli side during the 1967 war:

"I had not known how Jewish I was." This is an arresting statement from a man who was thought to be perhaps the greatest Jewish spiritual leader of his time. And whether or not it affects their politics, Jews certainly appear to have a very vivid sense of peoplehood. Prof. MacDonald quotes theologian Eugene Borowitz as saying,"most Jews claim to be equipped with an interpersonal friend-or-foe sensing device that enables them to detect the presence of another Jew, despite heavy camouflage." Always to think in terms of "friends or foe" is no insignificant matter.

Prof. MacDonald is therefore skeptical of Jewish disavowals: "Surface declarations of a lack of Jewish identity may be highly misleading." He notes that Jewish publications write about the power and influence of American Jews in language Jews would immediately denounce as "anti-Semitic" if used by gentiles. He agrees with Joseph Sobran, who has said "they want to be Jews among themselves but resent being seen as Jews by Gentiles. They want to pursue their own distinct interests while pretending that they have no such interests ... "

Prof. MacDonald argues that the success of Jewish-led intellectual movements has been possible only because their Jewish character was hidden. If multi-culturalism or mass immigration or The Authoritarian Personality had been promoted by Orthodox Jews in black coats the Jewish element would have been clear. Prof. MacDonald writes that in fact, "the Jewish political agenda was not an aspect of the theory and the theories themselves had no overt Jewish content. Gentile intellectuals approaching these theories were therefore unlikely to view them as aspects of Jewish-gentile cultural competition or as an aspect of a specifically Jewish political agenda." Prof. MacDonald also claims that Jews have often tried to conceal the Jewish character of an intellectual movement by recruiting token gentiles for visible positions as spokesmen. He writes that this tactic was so common in the American Communist Party that gentiles often saw through it and resigned.

But how can motives ever be completely known? Prof. MacDonald sets a difficult test: "The best evidence that individuals have really ceased to have a Jewish identity is if they choose a political option that they perceive as clearly not in the interest of Jews as a group. In the absence of a clearly perceived conflict with Jewish interests, it remains possible that different political choices among ethnic Jews are only differences in tactics for how best to achieve Jewish interests."

This standard may seem unduly harsh -- until it is applied to white gentiles. Third-World immigration, affirmative action, anti-discrimination laws, and forced integration are clearly not in the interests of whites, yet many whites embrace them, thus demonstrating how completely they have abandoned their racial identity.

Finally, Prof. MacDonald raises the disturbing possibility that some Jews, because of centuries of conflict with gentiles, actively hate gentile society and consciously wish to destroy it: "a fundamental motivation of Jewish intellectuals involved in social criticism has simply been hatred of the gentile-dominated power structure perceived as anti-Semitic." He describes the 19th century German-Jewish poet

Heinrich Heine as "using his skill, reputation and popularity to undermine the intellectual confidence of the established order."

In defense of this highly provocative view, Prof. MacDonald quotes Benjamin Disraeli on the effects of centuries of Jewish-gentile relations on Jews: "They may have become so odious and so hostile to mankind as to merit for their present conduct, no matter how occasioned, the obloquy and ill-treatment of the communities in which they dwell and with which they are scarcely permitted to mingle."

Apart from any questions of motives, however, is the question of numbers. Jews are a tiny minority in the United States and within that minority there is disagreement even on matters that clearly affect Jews. How can Jews possibly be responsible for dramatic changes in the intellectual landscape? In Prof. MacDonald's view, the explanation lies in the intelligence, energy, dedication, and cohesiveness of Jews. He attributes a great deal to the average IQ of Jews -- at 115, a full standard deviation above the white gentile average -- and to "their hard work and dedication, their desire to make a mark on the world, and their desire to rise in the world, engage in personal promotion, and achieve public acclaim... " He also believes Jews have worked together unfailingly on any question they consider necessary for survival:

"Intellectual activity is like any other human endeavor: Cohesive groups outcompete individual strategies." He notes that there has never been a time when large numbers of white Americans favored non-white immigration; it was a cohesive, determined minority that beat down the disorganized resistance of the majority.

Prof. MacDonald believes that because of the effectiveness of some Jews, it was not even necessary that most Jews actively support anti-majoritarian movements, but that Jewish activity was still decisive. As he puts it, "Jewish-dominated intellectual movements were a critical factor (necessary condition) for the triumph of the intellectual left in late twentieth-century Western societies." This, of course, can never be tested, but there can be no doubt that American Jews have had a disproportionate effect on the American intellect. Prof. MacDonald quotes Walter Kerr, writing in 1968, to the effect that "what has happened since World War II is that the American sensibility has become part Jewish, perhaps as much Jewish as it is anything else... The literate American mind has come in some measure to think Jewishly."

Aside from the question of whether Prof. MacDonald is right is the further question of what difference it makes if he is right. If correct, his thesis certainly sheds light on the rapidity with which whites lost their will. Just a few decades ago whites were a confident race, proud of their achievements, convinced of their fitness to dominate the globe. Today they are a declining, apologetic people, ashamed of their history and not sure even of their claim to lands they have occupied for centuries. It is very rare for fundamental concepts to be stood on their heads in the course of just a generation or two, as has happened with thinking about race. Such speed suggests there has been something more than natural change.

Kevin MacDonald's The Culture of Critique

Reviewed by Stanley Hornbeck

In The Culture of Critique, Kevin MacDonald advances a carefully researched but extremely controversial thesis: that certain 20th century intellectual movements -- largely established and led by Jews -- have changed European societies in fundamental ways and destroyed the confidence of Western man. He claims that these movements were designed, consciously or unconsciously, to advance Jewish interests even though they were presented to non-Jews as universalistic and even utopian. He concludes that the increasing dominance of these ideas has had profound political and social consequences that benefited Jews but caused great harm to gentile societies. This analysis, which he makes with considerable force, is an unusual indictment of a people generally thought to be more sinned against than sinning.

The Culture of Critique is the final title in Prof. MacDonald's massive, three-volume study of Jews and their role in history. The two previous volumes are A People That Shall Dwell Alone and Separation and its Discontents, published by Praeger in 1994 and 1998. The series is written from a sociobiological perspective that views Judaism as a unique survival strategy that helps Jews compete with other ethnic groups. Prof. MacDonald, who is a psychologist at the University of California at Long Beach, explains this perspective in the first volume, which describes Jews as having a very powerful sense of uniqueness that has kept them socially and genetically separate from other peoples. The second volume traces the history of Jewish-gentile relations, and finds the causes of anti-Semitism primarily in the almost invariable commercial and intellectual dominance of gentile societies by Jews and in their refusal to assimilate. The Culture of Critique brings his analysis into the present century, with an account of the Jewish role in the radical critique of traditional culture.

The intellectual movements Prof. MacDonald discusses in this volume are Marxism, Freudian psychoanalysis, the Frankfurt school of sociology, and Boasian anthropology. Perhaps most relevant from a racial perspective, he also traces the role of Jews in promoting multi-culturalism and Third World immigration. Throughout his analysis Prof. MacDonald reiterates his view that Jews have promoted these movements as Jews and in the interests of Jews, though they have often tried to give the impression that they had no distinctive interests of their own. Therefore Prof. MacDonald's most profound charge against Jews is not ethnocentrism but dishonesty -- that while claiming to be working for the good of mankind they have often worked for their own good and to the detriment of others. While attempting to promote the brotherhood of man by dissolving the ethnic identification of gentiles, Jews have maintained precisely the kind of intense group solidarity they decry as immoral in others.

Celebrating Diversity
Prof. MacDonald claims that one of the most consistent ways in which Jews have advanced their interests has been to promote pluralism and diversity -- but only for others. Ever since the 19th century, they have led movements that tried to discredit the traditional foundations of gentile society: patriotism, racial loyalty, the Christian basis for morality, social homogeneity, and sexual restraint. At the same time, within their own communities, and with regard to the state of Israel, they have often supported the very institutions they attack in gentile society.

Why is this in the interests of Jews? Because the parochial group loyalty characteristic of Jews attracts far less attention in a society that does not have a cohesive racial and cultural core. The Jewish determination not to assimilate fully, which accounts for their survival as a people for thousands for years -- even without a country -- has invariably attracted unpleasant and even murderous scrutiny in nations with well -defined national identities. In Prof. MacDonald's view it is therefore in the interest of Jews to dilute and weaken the identity of any people among whom they live. Jewish identity can flower in safety only when gentile identity is weak.

Prof. MacDonald quotes a remarkable passage from Charles Silberman: "American Jews are committed to cultural tolerance because of their belief -- one firmly rooted in history -- that Jews are safe only in a society acceptant of a wide range of attitudes and behaviors, as well as a diversity of religious and ethnic groups. It is this belief, for example, not approval of homosexuality, that leads an overwhelming majority of American Jews to endorse 'gay rights' and to take a liberal stance on most other so-called 'social' issues."

He is saying, in effect, that when Jews make the diversity-is-our-strength argument it is in support of their real goal of diluting a society's homogeneity so that Jews will feel safe. They are couching a Jewish agenda in terms they think gentiles will accept. Likewise, as the second part of the Silberman quotation suggests, Jews may support deviant movements, not because they think it is good for the country but because it is good for the Jews.

Prof. Silberman also provides an illuminating quote from a Jewish economist who thought that republicans had more sensible economic policies but who voted for the Democratic presidential candidate anyway. His reason? "I'd rather live in a country governed by the faces I saw at the Democratic convention than those I saw at the Republican convention." This man apparently distrusts white gentiles and voted for a racially mixed party even if its economic policies were wrong. What is good for Jews appears to come before what is good for the country.

Earl Raab, former president of heavily Jewish Brandeis University makes the diversity argument in a slightly different way. Expressing his satisfaction with the prediction that by the middle of the next century whites will become a minority, he writes, "We have tipped beyond the point where a Nazi-Aryan party will be able to prevail in this country." He is apparently prepared to displace the people and culture of the founding stock in order to prevent the theoretical rise of an anti-Jewish regime. Prof. Raab appears to see whites mainly as potential Nazis, and is willing to sacrifice their culture and national continuity in order to defuse an imagined threat to Jews. This passage takes for granted the continued future existence of Jews as a distinct community even as gentile whites decline in numbers and influence.

In the same passage, Prof. Raab continues by noting that, "[w]e [Jews] have been nourishing the American climate of opposition to bigotry for about half a century. That climate has not yet been perfected, but the heterogeneous nature of our population tends to make it irreversible..." -- just as it tends to make the ultimate displacement of European culture also irreversible.

Prof. MacDonald traces the development of this diversity strategy to several sources. It is widely recognized that the German-Jewish immigrant Franz Boas (1858-1942) almost single-handedly established the current contours of anthropology, ridding it of all biological explanations for differences in human culture or behavior. Prof. MacDonald reports that he and his followers -- with the notable exceptions of Margaret Mead and Ruth Benedict -- were all Jews with strong Jewish identities: "Jewish identification and the pursuit of perceived Jewish interests, particularly in advocating an ideology of cultural pluralism as a model for Western societies, has been the 'invisible subject' of American anthropology."

By 1915, Boas and his students controlled the American Anthropological Association and by 1926 they headed every major American university anthropology department. From this position of dominance they promoted the idea that race and biology are trivial matters, and that environment counts for everything. They completely recast anthropology so as to provide intellectual support for open immigration, integration, and miscegenation. They also laid the foundation for the idea that because all races have the same potential, the failures of non-whites must be blamed exclusively on white oppression. The ultimate conclusion of Boasian anthropology was that since environment accounts for all human differences, every inequality in achievement can be eliminated by changing the environment. This has been the justification for enormous and wasteful government intervention programs.

The entire "civil rights" movement can be seen as a natural consequence of the triumph of Boasian thinking. Since all races were equivalent, separation was immoral. The color line also sharpened white self-consciousness in ways that might make whites more aware of Jewish parochialism. Thus it was, according to Prof. MacDonald, that Jews almost single-handedly launched the desegregation movement. Without the leadership of Jews, the NAACP might never have been established, and until 1975 every one of its presidents was a Jew. Prof. MacDonald reports that in 1917, when the black separatist Marcus Garvey visited NAACP headquarters, he saw so many white faces that he stormed out, complaining that it was a white organization.

Prof. MacDonald concludes that the efforts of Jews were crucial to the "civil rights" transformation of America. He quotes a lawyer for the American Jewish Congress who claims that "many of these [civil rights] laws were actually written in the offices of Jewish agencies by Jewish staff people, introduced by Jewish legislators and pressured into being by Jewish voters."

While the Boas school was promoting integration and racial equivalence, it was also critical of, in Prof. MacDonald's words, "American culture as overly homogeneous, hypocritical, emotionally and aesthetically repressive (especially with regard to sexuality). Central to this program was creating ethnographies of idyllic [Third-World] cultures that were free of the negatively perceived traits that were attributed to Western culture."

The Role of the anthropologist became one of criticizing everything about Western society while glorifying everything primitive. Prof. MacDonald notes that Boasian portrayals of non-Western peoples deliberately ignored barbarism and cruelty or simply attributed it to contamination from the West. He sees this as a deliberate attempt to undermine the confidence of Western societies and to make them permeable to Third World influences and people. Today, this view is enshrined in the dogma that America must remain open to immigration because immigrants bring spirit and energy that natives somehow lack.

Authoritarian Personalities
In order to open European-derived societies to the immigration that would transform them, it was necessary to discredit racial solidarity and commitment to tradition. Prof. MacDonald argues that this was the basic purpose of a group of intellectuals known as the Frankfurt School. What is properly known as the Institute of Social Research was founded in Frankfurt, Germany, during the Weimar period by a Jewish millionaire but was closed down by the Nazis shortly after they took power. Most of its staff emigrated to the United States and the institute reconstituted itself at UC Berkeley. The organization was headed by Max Horkheimer, and its most influential members were T.W. Adorno, Erich Fromm, and Herbert Marcuse, all of whom had strong Jewish identities. Horkheimer made no secret of the partisan nature of the institute's activities: "Research would be able here to transform itself directly into propaganda," he wrote. (Italics in the original)

Prof. MacDonald devotes many pages to an analysis of The Authoritarian Personality, which was written by Adorno and appeared in 1950. It was part of a series called Studies in Prejudice, produced by the Frankfurt school, which included titles like Anti-Semitism and Emotional Disorder. The Authoritarian Personality, which was particularly influential because, according to Prof. MacDonald, the American Jewish Committee heavily funded its promotion and because Jewish academics took up its message so enthusiastically.

The book's purpose is to make every group affiliation sound as if it were a sign of mental disorder. Everything from patriotism to religion to family -- and race -- loyalty are sign of a dangerous and defective "authoritarian personality." Because drawing distinctions between different groups is illegitimate, all group loyalties -- even close family ties! -- are "prejudice." As Christopher Lasch has written, the book leads to the conclusion that prejudice "could be eradicated only by subjecting the American people to what amounted to collective psychotherapy -- by treating them as inmates of an insane asylum."

But according to Prof. MacDonald it is precisely the kind of group loyalty, respect for tradition, and consciousness of differences central to Jewish identity that Horkheimer and Adorno described as mental illness in gentiles. These writers adopted what eventually became a favorite Soviet tactic against dissidents: Anyone whose political views were different from theirs was insane. As Prof. MacDonald explains, the Frankfurt school never criticized or even described Jewish group identity -- only that of gentiles: "behavior that is critical to Judaism as a successful group evolutionary strategy is conceptualized as pathological in gentiles."

For these Jewish intellectuals, anti-Semitism was also a sign of mental illness: They concluded that Christian self-denial and especially sexual repression caused hatred of Jews. The Frankfurt school was enthusiastic about psycho-analysis, according to which "Oedipal ambivalence toward the father and anal-sadistic relations in early childhood are the anti-Semite's irrevocable inheritance."

In addition to ridiculing patriotism and racial identity, the Frankfurt school glorified promiscuity and Bohemian poverty. Prof. MacDonald sees the school as a seminal influence: "Certainly many of the central attitudes of the largely successful 1960s countercultural revolution find expression in The Authoritarian Personality, including idealizing rebellion against parents, low-investment sexual relationships, and scorn for upward social mobility, social status, family pride, the Christian religion, and patriotism."

Of the interest here, however, is the movement's success in branding ancient loyalties to nation and race as mental illnesses. Although he came later, the French-Jewish "deconstructionist" Jacques Derrida was in the same tradition when he wrote:

"The idea behind deconstruction is to deconstruct the workings of strong nation-states with powerful immigration policies, to deconstruct the rhetoric of nationalism, the politics of place, the metaphysics of native land and native tongue... The idea is to disarm the bombs... of identity that nation-states build to defend themselves against the stranger, against Jews and Arabs and immigrants... "

As Prof. MacDonald puts it, "Viewed at its most abstract level, a fundamental agenda is thus to influence the European-derived peoples of the United States to view concern about their own demographic and cultural eclipse as irrational and as an indication of psychopathology." Needless to say, this project has been successful; anyone opposed to the displacement of whites is routinely treated as a mentally unhinged "hate-monger," and whenever whites defend their group interests they are described as psychologically inadequate. The irony has not escaped Prof. MacDonald: "The ideology that ethnocentrism was a form of psychopathology was promulgated by a group that over its long history had arguably been the most ethnocentric group among all the cultures of the world."

Immigration
Prof. MacDonald argues that it is entirely natural for Jews to promote open immigration. It brings about the "diversity" Jews find comforting and it keeps America open to persecuted co-religionists throughout the world. He says Jews are the only group that has always fought for mass immigration; a few European ethnic organizations have made sporadic efforts to make it easier for their own people to come, but only Jews have consistently promoted open borders for all comers. Moreover, whatever disagreements they may have had on other issues, Jews of every political persuasion have favored high immigration.

This, too, goes back many years, and Prof. MacDonald traces in considerable detail the sustained Jewish pro-immigration effort. Israel Zangwill, author of the eponymous 1908 play The Melting Pot, was of the view that "there is only one way to World Peace, and that is the absolute abolition of passports, visas, frontiers, custom houses... " He was nevertheless an ardent Zionist and disapproved of Jewish intermarriage.

Although the statue of liberty, properly known as Liberty Enlightening the World, was a gift to the United States from France as a tribute to American political traditions, the sonnet by the Jewish Emma Lazarus helped change it into a symbol of immigration. Affixed to the base of the statue several decades after its construction, the poem welcomes to America "huddled masses yearning to breath free/The wretched refuse of your teeming shore."

Prof. MacDonald has discovered that implausible arguments about diversity being a quintessentially American strength have been made by Jews for a long time. He reports that in 1948 the American Jewish Committee was urging Congress to believe that "Americanism is the spirit behind the welcome that America has traditionally extended to people of all races, all religions, all nationalities." Of course, there had never been such a tradition. In 1952, the American Jewish

Congress argued in hearings on immigration that "our national experience has confirmed beyond a doubt that our very strength lies in the diversity of our peoples." This, too, was at a time when U.S. immigration law was still explicitly designed to maintain a white majority.

It is often said that when the old immigration policy was scrapped in 1965, scarcely anyone knew, and no one predicted, that the new law would change the racial makeup of the country. Prof. MacDonald disputes this, arguing that this had been the objective of Jewish groups from the beginning.

Prof. MacDonald finds that Jews have been the foremost advocates of immigration in England, France, and Canada, and that Jewish groups were the most vocal opponents of independence for Quebec. Australian Jews led the effort to dismantle the "white Australia" policy, one reason for which was cited in an editorial in the Australian Jewish Democrat: "The strengthening of multi-cultural or diverse Australia is also our most effective insurance policy against anti-Semitism. The day Australia has a Chinese Australian Governor General I would feel more confident of my freedom to live as a Jewish Australian." Like Earl Raab writing about the United States, this Australian Jew is prepared to sacrifice the traditional culture, people, and identity of Australia to specifically Jewish interests. It would not be surprising if such an openly expressed objective did not have the opposite effect from the intended, and increase anti-Jewish sentiment.

It is well known that Jews have been traditionally associated with the left, and Prof. MacDonald investigates this connection in some detail. Historically it was understandable that Jews should support movements that advocated overthrowing the existing order. After emancipation, Jews met resistance from gentile elites who did not want to lose ground to competitors, and outsiders easily become revolutionaries. However, in Prof. MacDonald's view, Jewish commitment to leftist causes has often been motivated by the hope that communism, especially, would be a tool for combating anti-Semitism, and by expectation that universalist social solutions would be yet another way to dissolve gentile loyalties that might exclude Jews. The appeal of univeralist ideologies is tied to the implicit understanding that Jewish particularism will be exempt:

"At the extreme, acceptance of a universalist ideology by gentiles would result in gentiles not perceiving Jews as in a different social category at all, while nonetheless Jews would be able to maintain a strong personal identity as Jews."

Prof. MacDonald argues that Jews had specifically Jewish reasons for supporting the Bolshevik revolution. Czarist Russia was notorious for its anti-Semitic policies and, during its early years, the Soviet Union seemed to be the promised land for Jews: it ended state anti-Semitism, tried to eradicate Christianity, opened opportunities to individual Jews, and preached a "classless" society in which Jewishness would presumably attract no negative attention. Moreover, since Marxism taught that all conflict was economic rather than ethnic, many Jews believed it heralded the end of anti-Semitism.

Prof. MacDonald emphasizes that although Jewish Communists preached both atheism and the solidarity of the world's working people, they took pains to preserve a distinct, secular Jewish identity. He reports that Lenin himself (who had one Jewish grandparent) approved the continuation of an explicitly Jewish identity under Communism, and in 1946 the Communist Party of the United States voted a resolution also supporting Jewish peoplehood in Communist countries. Thus, although Communism was supposed to be without borders or religion, Jews were confident that it would make a place for their own group identity. He writes that despite the official view that all men were to be brothers, "very few Jews lost their Jewish identity during the entire soviet era."

Jewish Communists sometimes betrayed remarkable particularism. Prof. MacDonald quotes Charles Pappoport, the French Communist leader: "The Jewish people [are] the bearer of all the great ideas of unity and human community in history... The disappearance of the Jewish people would signify the death of humankind, the final transformation of man into a wild beast." This seems to attribute to Jews an elite position incompatible with "unity and human community."

Prof. MacDonald argues that many Jews began to fall away from Communism only after Stalin showed himself to be anti-Semitic. And just as Jews had been the leading revolutionaries in anti-Semitic pre-Revolutionary Russia, Jews became the leading dissidents in an anti-Semitic Soviet Union. A similar pattern can be found in the imposed Communist governments of Eastern Europe, which were largely dominated by Jews. The majority of the leaders of the Polish Communist Party, for example, spoke better Yiddish than Polish, and they too maintained a strong Jewish identity. After the fall of Communism many stopped being Polish and emigrated to Israel.

Prof. MacDonald writes that in Bela Kun's short-lived 1919 Communist government of Hungary, 95 percent of the leaders were Jews, and that at the time of the 1956 uprising Communism was so closely associated with Jews that the rioting had almost the flavor of a pogrom. He argues that in the United States as well, the hard core among Communists and members of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) was mainly Jewish. Here, too, a revolutionary, atheist, and universalist world-view was fully compatible with strong identification as Jews. Prof. MacDonald quotes from a study of American leftists:

"Many Communists, for example, state that they could never have married a spouse who was not a leftist. When Jews were asked if they could have married Gentiles, many hesitated, surprised by the question, and found it difficult to answer. Upon reflection, many concluded that they had always taken marriage to someone Jewish for granted." Their commitment as Jews was even more fundamental and unexamined than their commitment to the left.

Prof. MacDonald reports that many American Jews also abandoned Communism as it became increasingly anti-Semitic. For a large number, the Soviet Union's severing of diplomatic ties with Israel during the 1967 war was the last straw. A former SDS activist no doubt spoke for many when he explained, "If I must choose between the Jewish cause and a 'progressive' anti-Israel SDS, I shall choose the Jewish cause. If barricades are erected, I will fight as a Jew." According to Prof. MacDonald, American neoconservatism can also be described as a surface shift in external politics that leaves the more fundamental commitment to Jewish identity unchanged. Thus, former leftists abandoned an ideology that had turned against Israel and refashioned American conservatism into a different movement, the one unshakable theme of which was support for Israel. Neoconservatives also support high levels of immigration and were active in excluding white racial identification from the "respectable" right.

Objections
There are many possible objections to Prof. MacDonald's thesis. The first is that it is largely built on the assumption that Jews are dishonest. It is always risky to assume one understands the motives of others better than they do themselves. Jews have traditionally thought of themselves as a benevolent presence, even as a "light unto the nations" or a "chosen people." This is echoed today in the Jewish self image as champions of the excluded and the oppressed. Most of the time what passes for "social justice" has the effect of undermining the traditions and loyalties of gentile society, but are Jews deliberately undermining these things rather than righting what they perceive to be wrongs?

Prof. MacDonald concedes that many Jews are sincere in their support for liberal causes, but then escalates his indictment by arguing that "the best deceivers are those who deceive themselves." In other words, many Jews who are actually working for Jewish interests have first convinced themselves otherwise. A Jew who mainly wants America to become less white may also have convinced himself that America benefits from a multitude of cultures. Having convinced himself he can more effectively convince others.

Many Jews, Prof. MacDonald argues, are not even conscious of the extent to which their Jewishness is central to their identities or their political views. He quotes Rabbi Abraham Joshua Heschel on his surprise at how passionately he embraced the Israeli side during the 1967 war:

"I had not known how Jewish I was." This is an arresting statement from a man who was thought to be perhaps the greatest Jewish spiritual leader of his time. And whether or not it affects their politics, Jews certainly appear to have a very vivid sense of peoplehood. Prof. MacDonald quotes theologian Eugene Borowitz as saying,"most Jews claim to be equipped with an interpersonal friend-or-foe sensing device that enables them to detect the presence of another Jew, despite heavy camouflage." Always to think in terms of "friends or foe" is no insignificant matter.

Prof. MacDonald is therefore skeptical of Jewish disavowals: "Surface declarations of a lack of Jewish identity may be highly misleading." He notes that Jewish publications write about the power and influence of American Jews in language Jews would immediately denounce as "anti-Semitic" if used by gentiles. He agrees with Joseph Sobran, who has said "they want to be Jews among themselves but resent being seen as Jews by Gentiles. They want to pursue their own distinct interests while pretending that they have no such interests ... "

Prof. MacDonald argues that the success of Jewish-led intellectual movements has been possible only because their Jewish character was hidden. If multi-culturalism or mass immigration or The Authoritarian Personality had been promoted by Orthodox Jews in black coats the Jewish element would have been clear. Prof. MacDonald writes that in fact, "the Jewish political agenda was not an aspect of the theory and the theories themselves had no overt Jewish content. Gentile intellectuals approaching these theories were therefore unlikely to view them as aspects of Jewish-gentile cultural competition or as an aspect of a specifically Jewish political agenda." Prof. MacDonald also claims that Jews have often tried to conceal the Jewish character of an intellectual movement by recruiting token gentiles for visible positions as spokesmen. He writes that this tactic was so common in the American Communist Party that gentiles often saw through it and resigned.

But how can motives ever be completely known? Prof. MacDonald sets a difficult test: "The best evidence that individuals have really ceased to have a Jewish identity is if they choose a political option that they perceive as clearly not in the interest of Jews as a group. In the absence of a clearly perceived conflict with Jewish interests, it remains possible that different political choices among ethnic Jews are only differences in tactics for how best to achieve Jewish interests."

This standard may seem unduly harsh -- until it is applied to white gentiles. Third-World immigration, affirmative action, anti-discrimination laws, and forced integration are clearly not in the interests of whites, yet many whites embrace them, thus demonstrating how completely they have abandoned their racial identity.

Finally, Prof. MacDonald raises the disturbing possibility that some Jews, because of centuries of conflict with gentiles, actively hate gentile society and consciously wish to destroy it: "a fundamental motivation of Jewish intellectuals involved in social criticism has simply been hatred of the gentile-dominated power structure perceived as anti-Semitic." He describes the 19th century German-Jewish poet

Heinrich Heine as "using his skill, reputation and popularity to undermine the intellectual confidence of the established order."

In defense of this highly provocative view, Prof. MacDonald quotes Benjamin Disraeli on the effects of centuries of Jewish-gentile relations on Jews: "They may have become so odious and so hostile to mankind as to merit for their present conduct, no matter how occasioned, the obloquy and ill-treatment of the communities in which they dwell and with which they are scarcely permitted to mingle."

Apart from any questions of motives, however, is the question of numbers. Jews are a tiny minority in the United States and within that minority there is disagreement even on matters that clearly affect Jews. How can Jews possibly be responsible for dramatic changes in the intellectual landscape? In Prof. MacDonald's view, the explanation lies in the intelligence, energy, dedication, and cohesiveness of Jews. He attributes a great deal to the average IQ of Jews -- at 115, a full standard deviation above the white gentile average -- and to "their hard work and dedication, their desire to make a mark on the world, and their desire to rise in the world, engage in personal promotion, and achieve public acclaim... " He also believes Jews have worked together unfailingly on any question they consider necessary for survival:

"Intellectual activity is like any other human endeavor: Cohesive groups outcompete individual strategies." He notes that there has never been a time when large numbers of white Americans favored non-white immigration; it was a cohesive, determined minority that beat down the disorganized resistance of the majority.

Prof. MacDonald believes that because of the effectiveness of some Jews, it was not even necessary that most Jews actively support anti-majoritarian movements, but that Jewish activity was still decisive. As he puts it, "Jewish-dominated intellectual movements were a critical factor (necessary condition) for the triumph of the intellectual left in late twentieth-century Western societies." This, of course, can never be tested, but there can be no doubt that American Jews have had a disproportionate effect on the American intellect. Prof. MacDonald quotes Walter Kerr, writing in 1968, to the effect that "what has happened since World War II is that the American sensibility has become part Jewish, perhaps as much Jewish as it is anything else... The literate American mind has come in some measure to think Jewishly."

Aside from the question of whether Prof. MacDonald is right is the further question of what difference it makes if he is right. If correct, his thesis certainly sheds light on the rapidity with which whites lost their will. Just a few decades ago whites were a confident race, proud of their achievements, convinced of their fitness to dominate the globe. Today they are a declining, apologetic people, ashamed of their history and not sure even of their claim to lands they have occupied for centuries. It is very rare for fundamental concepts to be stood on their heads in the course of just a generation or two, as has happened with thinking about race. Such speed suggests there has been something more than natural change.

Here is a quote from Mein Kampf:

"The fight which Fascist Italy waged against Jewry's three principal weapons, the profound reasons for which may not have been consciously understood (though I do not believe this myself) furnishes the best proof that the poison fangs of that Power which transcends all State boundaries are being drawn, even though in an indirect way.
The prohibition of Freemasonry and secret societies, the suppression of the supranational Press and the definite abolition of Marxism, together with the steadily increasing consolidation of the Fascist concept of the State--all this will enable the Italian Government, in the course of some years, to advance more and more the interests of the Italian people without paying any attention to the hissing of the Jewish world-hydra.
"The English situation is not so favorable. In that country which has 'the freest democracy' the Jew dictates his will, almost unrestrained but indirectly, through his influence on public opinion."

Hello,

Anyone happen to know if there is a new version or update for the Sony
ICF-SW7600GR due "shortly" ?

Thinking of perhaps getting one to give for a gift.

Also contemplating waiting for the new Sangean 909X due out, apparently, by the end of the year, but I guess that when it does come out it'll probably be some $ 100 more. Not sure if worth waiting for ?

Thanks,
Bob

All I ccan suggest is that you try it.

If I comapre reception on the lower bands between using my own earth made from a copper pipe hammered into the ground somewhat away from the house to that using the mains earth I find there is way more noise using the mains earth and using both earths is almost as bad.

I think what Dave was saying is that open wire feeders will not pick up noise (or signals, for that matter) if they are truly balanced, because of common mode rejection. Which is true.

GMS phones seem to get into everything. I'd look for an audio path, not via HF radio circuitry.

Snow blowing across a wire antenna generates static electricity. Grounding the transmission line where it enters a structure is consistent with good operating practice. My radio floats on a 13 VDC switch mode power supply. The only ground is the coaxial cable from the feedthru.

The noise is in-phase and cancels when the transmission line is terminated in a "differential" input. The desired signal is + on one leg and - on the other. The desired signal remains after differential summation.

John, lo:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Balanced

Any external signal sources tend to induce only a common mode signal on the line and the balanced impedances to ground minimizes differential pickup due to stray electric fields. The conductors are sometimes twisted together to ensure that each conductor is equally exposed to any external magnetic fields that could induce unwanted noise.

Some balanced lines also have electromagnetic shielding to reduce the amount of noise introduced.

A balanced line allows a differential receiver to reduce the noise on a connection by rejecting common-mode interference. The lines have the same impedance to ground, so the interfering fields or currents induce the same voltage in both wires. Since the receiver responds only to the difference between the wires, it is not influenced by the induced noise voltage. If twisted pair becomes unbalanced, for example due to insulation failure, noise will be induced. Examples of twisted pairs include Cat-3 Ethernet cables or telephone wires.

Compared to unbalanced circuits, balanced lines reduce the amount of noise per distance, allowing a longer cable run to be practical. This is because electromagnetic interference will affect both signals the same way. Similarities between the two signals are automatically removed at the end of the transmission path when one signal is subtracted from the other.

Dave ? truly balanced configuration ?

Isn't that often harder to achieve

Have you tried using batteries, or even a linear power supply.
You may be amazed how much noise on the lower bands just vanishes when you do.

2952. Would decalring bankruptcy protect iBiquity from the class-action suit?

"HD Car Radio Investigation"

"Consumer statutes and laws protect the purchasers of various products such as HD car radios. A party may be legally liable for statements, omissions or misrepresentations of material facts that should have been know to be false or misleading and promoted the sale of the product. Such laws protect innocent consumers from unlawful and deceptive practices. The victims of questionable business practices by parties such automobile manufacturers are the consumers who purchase or lease cars with HD car radios at significantly increased costs when these devices fail to function as they are represented to work. As news develops and the investigation proceeds, Keefe Bartels, LLC will carefully monitor events and research all relevant laws."

http://www.keefebartels.com/CM/Custom/HD-Car-Radio-Investigation.asp

"HD Radio Not High Definition"

"Despite iBiquity’s claims of improved sound quality and transmission, there have been numerous complaints about HD Radio from not only the radio industry but also consumers... Automakers are aware of the complaints associated with HD Radio. For example, in 2007, BMW released a Service Information Bulletin describing the problems associated with HD Radio, but noted that there was no retrofit kit or procedure available. The attorneys at Keefe Bartels are continuing their investigation into HD Radio and whether consumers are being forced to purchase technology that does not work as claimed. If you have experienced problems with your factory-installed HD radio receiver, we are interested in speaking to you."

http://www.keefebartels.com/CM/HotTopicsandAlerts/HotTopicsandAlerts168.asp

With receivers sales flat, HD conversions flat, no interest outside the U.S. in HD (the Swiss just canned HD), and with this class-action suit looming, would declaring bankruptcy protect iBiquity? Could this law firm also go after Struble and al of his cohorts, separately? With broadcasters getting involved over loss of revenue from IBLOCK, and false promises by iBiquity, this investigation could escalate into involving many other entities. Keefe Bartels has at least BMW by the balls, because BMW had a TSB and Trouble-Shooting HD Radio Guide starting back in 2007, yet continue to install standard HD Radio, passing the costs onto unsuspecting customers, and has no resolution to these problems.

Haven't checked much, but other automakers seem liable, too. Here's hype from Volvo:

Seems Rolls, Volvo, Audi (not yet installed), Scion, etc are liable, too. I'll have to email these attorneys with an updated list, but they are probably already checking. I posted links to these attorneys in most of the automaker forums that had complaints about HD Radio!

As much as I appreciate your glee, and the ultimate market recognition that this noise isn't working, do keep in mind the enormous investment represented here. Not only in hardware, and R&D, but in pocketing FCC commissioners who signed on to this crap above public objections.

A court case will likely be what it takes to finally begin dismantling IBOC, but iBiquity will not go down easy. And HD will not disappear overnight.

In other words, don't do a victory lap, yet. This is only a first of many, many steps.

Filing for Bankruptcy automatically stays all pending lawsuits, and would require any new ones to obtain the permission of the Bankruptcy court first. Ultimately Bankruptcy makes certain there is nothing left in the company to pay any judgements or awards...

IF HD is really dead, then iBiquity would be headed for Chapter 7 as opposed to Chapter 11, as there would be no ongoing business. Either way there will be nothing left for consumers and operators who bought into the technology.

This is absolutely true. The "slow death" has already begun. Equipment manufacturers have noticed the precipitous drop in orders for IBOC gear by radio stations. Retail stores never have (and still do not) sell anything that remotely resembles an "HD Radio" selection of product for consumers. The lobbying effort to have the FCC coerce the manufacturers of unrelated equipment (e.g. cell phones) to include "HD Radio" in their products will ultimately fail. It is, after all, a marketplace issue. If there's no market, what's the point? You don't dictate to consumers what they will buy and like, although that fine point seems to have been lost on The Alliance.

Significantly, even the industry trades are getting bored with the topic. Even if something is exciting and successful, after awhile there is only so much that can be said. When it is a flat-out dud, only constant lobbying by those with vested interests can keep the tongues wagging, and that is pretty well running out at this point.

> In other words, don't do a victory lap, yet. This is only a first > of many, many steps.

Indeed. Some time in the future however, someone will say, "Oh, by the way, whatever became of 'HD Radio'?"

That's when you will see the IBOC gear over at Weirdstuff Warehouse along with the Cartrivision and DiVX players.

The last two times lawyers sued a large company on my behalf I got a IMHO too many people laughed off complaints that the digital carriers would cause interference to first adjacent analogs without realizing these same adjacent would interfere with the digital carriers rendering HD useless in certain (many?) situations.

2969. Keefe Bartels investigation into HD Radio

From the website http://www.keefebartels.com, law firm Keefe Bartels have started an investigation into claims and complaints regarding HD radio. Of concern is are consumers being forced to purchase technology that doesn't work as claimed. And a case is being made that that carmakers knew the technology came with problems. They've referenced " 2007, BMW released a Service Information Bulletin describing the problems associated with HD Radio, but noted that there was no retrofit kit or procedure available."

Consumer complaints come from factory installed HD radio receivers, but the law firm is also looking closely at iBiquity, they said according to iBiquity, the “HD” does not stand for anything. Instead, iBiquity likely uses the “HD” as a "marketing device based upon consumers’ understanding and ever increasing desire for HD television." A marketing slip of the tong!

Their site also says complaints have come from the industry and consumers and includes the following:

Radio receiver bumping station from HD to analog mode;
Echo sound heard when the radio switches between HD and analog modes;
Crackling or static sound when HD mode is inactive;
Insufficient numbers of HD Radio stations;
Loss of signal while driving in valleys or between high buildings; Signal disruption for environmental conditions; and Adjacent channel interference.

The net result of this could be:

iBiquity will end up paying and paying their law firms.
HD manufactures will pay and pay their law firms
Carmakers will pay and pay their law firms
Consumers may get a new radio installed free
HD radio will be branded as bad technology that nobody will touch for fear of being sued.
Before purchasing an HD product, consumers will sign and read an understanding and accept all risks from operating the technology.
iBquity will have to change their marketing to say, may hear an improved sound quality.
Broadcasters may also be at risk of paying and paying their lawyers too.

As far as I'm concerned, allowing a signal to be broadcast, at a frequency that is already allocated to something else, is always going to be a bad idea (unless it is a system using very directional antennas). From what I've read in this NG. HD-Radio does just that. It ends up allowing digital signals to be transmitted on frequencies already allocated to analogue signals. Whoever thought that would be OK, obviously either doesn't understand radio, or simply doesn't give a sh*t about the consequences.

Keefe Bartels investigation into HD Radio

From the website http://www.keefebartels.com, law firm Keefe Bartels have started an investigation into claims and complaints regarding HD radio. Of concern is are consumers being forced to purchase technology that doesn't work as claimed. And a case is being made that that carmakers knew the technology came with problems. They've referenced " 2007, BMW released a Service Information Bulletin describing the problems associated with HD Radio, but noted that there was no retrofit kit or procedure available."

Consumer complaints come from factory installed HD radio receivers, but the law firm is also looking closely at iBiquity, they said according to iBiquity, the “HD” does not stand for anything. Instead, iBiquity likely uses the “HD” as a "marketing device based upon consumers’ understanding and ever increasing desire for HD television." A marketing slip of the tong!

Their site also says complaints have come from the industry and consumers and includes the following:

Radio receiver bumping station from HD to analog mode;
Echo sound heard when the radio switches between HD and analog modes;
Crackling or static sound when HD mode is inactive;
Insufficient numbers of HD Radio stations;
Loss of signal while driving in valleys or between high buildings;
Signal disruption for environmental conditions; and Adjacent channel interference.

The net result of this could be:

iBiquity will end up paying and paying their law firms.
HD manufactures will pay and pay their law firms
Carmakers will pay and pay their law firms
Consumers may get a new radio installed free
HD radio will be branded as bad technology that nobody will touch for fear of being sued.
Before purchasing an HD product, consumers will sign and read an understanding and accept all risks from operating the technology.
iBquity will have to change their marketing to say, may hear an improved sound quality.
Broadcasters may also be at risk of paying and paying their lawyers too.

Looks like The Emperor Wears No Clothes

http://boards.radio-info.com/smf/index.php?topic=175073.msg1516627#msg1516627

"Broadcasters may also be at risk of paying and paying their lawyers too."

Wow - is this a slip of the tongue, or do they know something that I already know? SMS - you can deny this, but it is going to blow up into a huge investigation, and no doubt, will eventually be national/international news.

iBiquity and company was already accused of violating the Sherman Act:

"New York District Court Dismisses Digital Radio Technology Suit"

"Kahn and his company Kahn Communications, Inc. alleged that the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) and non-government defendants (iBiquity Digital Corp., Lucent Technologies, Inc., Texas Instruments Inc., and Clear Channel Communications, Inc.) conspired to violate the Sherman Act through the FCC's regulation of digital radio technology, and that the non-government defendants engaged in other 'monopolistic behavior.'"

http://www.abanet.org/antitrust/at-committees/at-s2/ebulletins/2007/issue-50.shtml

Here's a link to the Sherman Act:

http://www.justice.gov/atr/laws.htm

It would seem that the level of fraud against the American people would be of criminal act:

"The Sherman Act also makes it a crime to monopolize any part of interstate commerce. An unlawful monopoly exists when only one firm controls the market for a product or service, and it has obtained that market power, not because its product or service is superior to others, but by suppressing competition with anticompetitive conduct."

1 - That is why transitioning some of the AM/MW

Stations to the FM HD-Radio HD-2 Channels

When I have been able to get a good quality
FM HD-Radio Signal : To Me the FM Stereo
Sound did sound better than the old Analog.

But most of the time all I can get is a Blinking Blue Light {No HD Lock} and all I can hear is the old Analog FM Stereo Signal and sometimes not even that; just mono.

Dave - There is "Floats" Floating

- A balanced line allows a differential receiver to reduce the noise on a
- connection by rejecting common-mode interference. The lines have the
- same impedance to ground, so the interfering fields or currents induce
- the same voltage in both wires. Since the receiver responds only to the
- difference between the wires, it is not influenced by the induced noise
- voltage. If twisted pair becomes unbalanced, for example due to
- insulation failure, noise will be induced. Examples of twisted pairs
- include Cat-3 Ethernet cables or telephone wires.
- Compared to unbalanced circuits, balanced lines reduce the amount of
```

- noise per distance, allowing a longer cable run to be practical.
This is
- because electromagnetic interference will affect both signals the same
- way. Similarities between the two signals are automatically removed at
- the end of the transmission path when one signal is subtracted from the
- other.

Dave,

That is why an all-in-one simple Speaker Wire* Dipole or Loop Antenna can provide such good results for basic Shortwave Radio Listening; and at a very low cost plus simplicity of build.
http://www.ginelectronics.com/catalog/images/steren%20speaker%20wire.jpg

* Get the Speaker Wire with one Lead Silver colored and the other Lead Copper colored.
http://www.cnet.com/i/hlp/HT_speaker3.jpg Makes it easy to tell one side from the other.

Note #s 16 or 18 AWG Speaker Wire are good for Shortwave Antennas; and #24 AWG can make a nice [Stealthy] SWL Antenna.

Run the Speaker Wire as mini Twin-Lead out to the Point where you want the Antenna to start and make an Overhand Knot in the Wire.
From this point split the 2-Wires apart; and run each wire in opposite directions to form a Dipole -or- run each Wire around to form a Loop and connect the two Bare Wire Ends to made the Loop Connection complete.

Some people use an Antenna Insulator where the Knot is formed to use for Mounting/Rigging.
http://hf-antenna.com/009/s_insulators.jpg

While others use a Single Ferrite Bead with 2~4 Turns of the twin Pair of Wires before the Splitting of the Pair.
http://www.dansdata.com/images/io022/beads560.jpg http://www.newark.com/productimages/nio/standard/4652265.jpg

Naturally the Speaker Wire functions as a Balanced Feed-in-Line {Pair of Twin Leads} from the Knot to the Radio.

But

- There are two items to consider in the first sentence. You refer to

You are an idiot.

The Preamble carries no force of law.

(Does "defence" against disease count?)

(Can there be "domestic tranquility" without a middle class?)

Friday was a good night. Saturday, there were too many contesters on so I did some listening around 6900. Barnyard Radio was on 6925 kHz for over an hour around 0000UT and Radio Gaga had a short broadcast on 6935 kHz around 0100UT. Time is probably not too accurate but both signals were strong here in Michigan.

Wow, a gutless creep too scared to use his real name attacks another person for, you're gonna love this, being too scared to use his real name.

The above gutless creep, a scared little coward, claims to be a loyal American, that all American wars are just and just to show his belief in his country he never, ever signed up and joined our armed forces. Yeah, the gutless, closet loving coward claims to love this countries wars but he isn't about to fight in any of them.

BMW knew about the problems with HD Radio (same with Jag) starting back in 2007 with this TSB:

http://www.1addicts.com/forums/showthread.php?p=4120400#post4120400

Also, with this BMW trouble-shooting guide:

BMW has continued to install standard HD Radio without a retrofit kit or procedure available to fix the problems (they are unfixable) passing the costs of installing HD Radio onto unsuspecting consumers.
Keefe Bartels is investigating other automakers, too, and also false claims by iBiquity, which can be proved. Non-HD broadcasters are also getting involved over lost revenue due to IBLOCK jamming, degradation of their analog signals, loss of coverage, etc... Keefe Bartels is not going away - LOL!

My question is, why all the disclaimage? And are you really that clueless, iBiquity? Are you effectively denying the validity/credibility of your consumer-marketing claims?.. Hiding behind a trademark-disclaimer - that HDRadio.com is 'managed' by the HD Radio Alliance - which is, for all intents and purposes, iBiquity (though that particular domain is registered to Clear Channel) - does not cut the mustard."

"HD Car Radio Investigation"

"Consumer statutes and laws protect the purchasers of various products such as HD car radios. A party may be legally liable for statements, omissions or misrepresentations of material facts that should have been know to be false or misleading and promoted the sale of the product. Such laws protect innocent consumers from unlawful and deceptive practices. The victims of questionable business practices by parties such automobile manufacturers are the consumers who purchase or lease cars with HD car radios at significantly increased costs when these devices fail to function as they are represented to work. As news develops and the investigation proceeds, Keefe Bartels, LLC will carefully monitor events and research all relevant laws."

http://www.keefebartels.com/CM/Custom/HD-Car-Radio-Investigation.asp

"HD Radio Not High Definition"

"Despite iBiquity's claims of improved sound quality and transmission, there have been numerous complaints about HD Radio from not only the radio industry but also consumers... Automakers are aware of the complaints associated with HD Radio. For example, in 2007, BMW released a Service Information Bulletin describing the problems associated with HD Radio, but noted that there was no retrofit kit or procedure available. The attorneys at Keefe Bartels are continuing their investigation into HD Radio and whether consumers are being forced to purchase technology that does not work as claimed. If you have experienced problems with your factory-installed HD radio receiver, we are interested in speaking to you."

http://www.keefebartels.com/CM/HotTopicsandAlerts/HotTopicsandAlerts168.asp

With receivers sales flat, HD conversions flat, no interest outside the U.S. in HD (the Swiss just canned HD), and with this class-action suit looming, would declaring bankruptcy protect iBiquity? Could this law firm also go after Struble and al of his cohorts, separately? With broadcasters getting involved over loss of revenue from IBLOCK, and false promises by iBiquity, this investigation could escalate into involving many other entities. Keefe Bartels has at least BMW by the balls, because BMW had a TSB and Trouble-Shooting HD Radio Guide starting back in 2007, yet continue to install standard HD Radio, passing the costs onto unsuspecting customers, and has no resolution to these problems.

The De-Zionization of the American Mind 2006-08-20

By Jean Bricmont

Americans are constantly told that they have to defend themselves against people who "hate them", but without understanding why they are hated. Is the cause our secular democracy? Our appetite for oil? There are lots of democracies in the world that are far more secular than the United States (Sweden, France...) and lots of places that want to buy oil at the best possible price (China) without arousing any noticeable hatred in the Middle East.

Of course, it is true that, throughout the Third World, Americans and Europeans are often considered arrogant and are not particularly liked. But the level of hatred that leads a large number of people to applaud an event like September 11 is peculiar to the Middle East. Indeed, the main political significance of September 11 did not derive from the number of people killed or even the spectacular achievement of the attackers, but from the fact that the attack was popular in large parts of the Middle East. That much was understood by Americans leaders and infuriated them. Such a level of hatred calls for explanation.

And there can be only one explanation: United States support for Israel. It is indeed Israel that is the main object of hatred, for reasons we shall describe, but since the United States uncritically supports Israel on almost every issue, constantly praises it as "the only democracy in the Middle East" and provides its main financial backing, the result is a "transfer" of hatred.

Why is Israel so hated? The constant stalling of "peace plans" in favor of more settlements and more war aggravates that hatred, but the basic cause lies in the very principles on which that state is built. There are basically two arguments that have justified establishing the State of Israel in Palestine: one is that "God" gave that land to the Jews, and the other is the Holocaust. The first one is deeply insulting to people who are profoundly religious, like most Arabs, but of another creed. And, for the second, it amounts to making people pay for a crime that they did not commit.

Both arguments claim that it is right for Jews, and only Jews, to set up a state in a land that would obviously be Arab, like Jordan or Lebanon, if not for the slow Zionist invasion. This is illustrated by the "law of return": any Jew, anywhere, having no connection with Palestine whatsoever, and not suffering from the slightest persecution, can, if he so wishes, emigrate to Israel and easily become a citizen, while the inhabitants who fled in 1948, or their children, cannot. Add to that the fact that a city claimed to be holy by three religions has become the "eternal capital of the Jewish people" (and only them) and one should start to understand the rage that all this provokes throughout the Arab and Muslim world.

It is precisely this [Jewish supremacist] aspect that infuriates most Arabs, even if they do not have any personal connection to Palestine. This situation delegitimizes the Arab regimes that are impotent in the face of the Zionist enemy and, after the defeat of the region's two main secular leaders, Nasser and Saddam Hussein (the latter thanks to the U.S.), leads to the rise of religious fundamentalism.

The conflict over Palestine goes beyond the second class status of Israeli Arabs or even the treatment of the Occupied Territories. Even if a Palestinian state were established on the latter, and even if full equality were granted to Israeli Arabs, the wounds of 1948 would not heal quickly. Arab leaders, even religious ones, can of course sign peace agreements with Israel, but they are fragile so long as the Arab population considers them unjust and does not accept them wholeheartedly. Palestine is the Alsace-Lorraine or the Taiwan of the Arab world and the fact that it is impossible to take it back does not mean that it can be forgotten . (I am not arguing here in favor of "wiping Israel off the map", or in favor of a "one state solution" but simply underlining what seems to me to be the root and the depth of the problem. In fact, I am not arguing for any solution partly because none seems to me to be attainable in the short term, but, more fundamentally, because I do not think that outsiders to the Middle East should propose such solutions.)

There is no sign that any of this is understood in Israel by more than a few individuals; if Arabs hate them, this is just another instance of the fact that everybody hates Jews and it only proves that they have to "defend themselves" (i.e. attack others pre-emptively) by any means necessary. That is bad enough, but why isn't this understood in the United States either? There are traditionally two answers to that: one is that the population is manipulated into supporting Israel by the government, the arms merchants or the oil industry, because Israel is a strategic U.S. ally; the other answer is that the United States is manipulated by the Israel lobby. The idea that Israel is a strategic ally, if by that one means a useful ally (useful to, say, the oil interests, broadly understood), although widely accepted, specially in the Left, does not survive a critical examination. That may have been the case in 1967 or even during the Cold War period, although one could argue that, even then, the Arab states were attracted by the Soviet Union only because it might support them in their struggle against Israel, albeit ineffectively. But both in 1991 and in 2003, the United States attacked Iraq without any help from Israel, even begging Israel not to intervene in 1991, in order for its Arab coalition not to collapse. Or consider the post-2003 occupation of Iraq, and suppose that the goal of that occupation is control over oil. In what sense does Israel help in that respect? Everything it does (the currents attacks on Gaza and Lebanon for example) further alienates the Arabs, and U.S. support for Israel makes the control of oil harder, not easier. Even the Iraqi parliament, Malaki and Sistani, who are the closest to allies that the United States can find there, condemn Israel's actions.

Finally, just imagine that the United States would make a 180 [degree] turn and suddenly side with the Palestinians, as they did with the Kosovars against the Serbs. Such a change of policies is by no means impossible: when Indonesia invaded East Timor in 1975, the US supported the invasion by providing most of Indonesia's weapons. Yet, 25 years later, the U.S. supported, or at least did not oppose, East Timor's accession to independence.

What effect would that have? Can anyone doubt that such a change of policy would facilitate U.S. access to oil fields and help it gain strategic allies (if any were still needed) throughout the Muslim world? In the Middle East, the main charge against the United States is that it is pro-Israel, because it lets itself be "manipulated by the Jews". Therefore, if Washington switched sides, there would be no more basis for hostility to U.S. presence, including its control over oil. Thus the notion of Israel as "strategic ally" makes no sense. This leads us to the "Israel lobby" answer, which is closer to the truth, but not the whole truth. To get a complete picture, one has to understand why the lobby works as effectively as it does, and that depends on factors lying outside the actions of the lobby itself. After all, the militant Zionists constituting the lobby are a minority among Jews, who themselves form a small minority of the American population. The Israel lobby does not work like other lobbies, for example, the arms and the oil industry lobbies (which is one of the reasons why it is easy to dismiss it as irrelevant, as long as one does not understand how it really exerts its influence).

Of course, like the latter, the Israel lobby does fund electoral campaigns and its power derives in part from its ability to target people in Congress who deviate from its "line". But if that were all, it could be easily defeated -indeed. There are other sources of electoral funding, the big industrial lobbies for example, and if the pro-Israel candidates could be shown to be paid to serve the interests of another state, their opponents could denounce the people who receive money from the lobby as some sort of agents of a foreign power. Just imagine a pro-French, pro-Chinese or pro-Japanese lobby that would try to significantly influence the U.S. Congress. Certainly, money alone cannot suffice.

What protects the Israel lobby is the fact that anyone who would denounce an opponent funded by the Lobby as a quasi-agent of a foreign power would immediately be accused of anti-Semitism. In fact, imagine that big business is unhappy with the current U.S. policies (as it well may be) and wants to change them-how could they do it? Any criticism of lobby influence on U.S. policy would immediately trigger the anti-Zionism-is-anti-Semitism accusation.

So the strength of the Israel lobby resides in part in this second line of defense, which itself is linked to its influence on the media. But even that could easily be defeated-not all the media are under the lobby's influence, and, more importantly, the media are not all-powerful: in Venezuela, they are anti-Chavez, but Chavez regularly wins elections. In France, the media were overwhelmingly in favor of the "yes" vote to the referendum on the European Constitution, yet the "no" won. The problem-and this is why the Israel lobby is so effective, is that it expresses a world view that is accepted too easily by too many Americans. After all, nothing could be more ridiculous than accusing someone of anti-Semitism because he wants or claims to put America's interests above those of Israel. Yet, the accusation is likely to be effective, but only because years of ideological brainwashing have predisposed people to consider U.S. and Israeli interests as identical-although instead of "interests" one speaks of "values".

Associated with this identification comes a systematically hostile view of the Arab and Muslim world, which both increases the lobby's effectiveness and is in part the result of its propaganda. There is an almost total lack of understanding of the Arab viewpoint on Palestine, and, in particular, of the [Jewish supremacist] nature of the problem. It is this triple layer of control (selective funding, the anti-Semitism card, or rather canard, and interiorization) that gives the lobby its peculiar strength. (And that is also why it is easy to dismiss its strength by saying, for instance, that, obviously, Jews don't control America. Sure, but direct control is not the way it works.)

People who think that it is the arms or the oil industry that are running the show in Washington as far as foreign policy is concerned should at least answer the following question: how does it work? There is no evidence whatsoever that the oil industry, for example, pushed for the Iraq war, the threats against Iran, or the attack on Lebanon . (There is a lot of evidence that the Israel lobby pushed for the Iraq war; see Jeff Blankfort, A War for Israel). They are supposed to act secretly, of course, but where is the evidence that they do? And if there is no evidence, even no indirect evidence, how does one know? Profits from the war, at least for major corporations, haven't materialized yet, and there are many indications that the U.S. economy will suffer a lot from war-related expenses and the associated deficits. On the other hand, it is enough to open any mainstream U.S. newspaper or TV and read or hear opinions expressed by Zionists calling for more war. War needs war propaganda and a supporting ideology, and the Zionists provide it, while none of this is offered by big business in general or the oil industry in particular.

When people in the antiwar movement divert attention from Israel by blaming big oil or big business for the wars (specially the one in Lebanon, or the threats against Iran) one should demand that they provide some evidence for their claims. Challenge all the apologists or excuse makers for Israel or its lobby within progressive circles. When politicians and journalists claim that Israel and the United States have common interests, ask what services exactly has Israel rendered to the United States recently. Of course one can always point to some (minor) services; but, then, ask them what a cold-blooded cost-benefits analysis would reveal and why such an analysis is impossible to undertake publicly. If they speak of common values (the fallback position), provide a list of discriminatory Israeli laws for non-Jews.

It is true that a change in the U.S. policy with respect to the Israel-Palestine conflict would change nothing about traditional imperialism-the United States would still support traditional elites everywhere, and press countries to provide a "favorable investment climate". But the conflict in the Middle East, involving Iraq, Iran, Lebanon, Syria, and Palestine, has all the aspects of a religious war-with Islam on one side and Zionism as a secular "Western" religion on the other. And wars of religion tend to be the most brutal and uncontrollable of all wars. What is at stake in the de-Zionization of the American mind is not only the fate of the unfortunate inhabitants of Palestine but also unspeakable miseries for the people of that region and maybe of the rest of the world. The ultimate irony in all this is that the fate of much of the world depends on the American people exercizing their right to self-determination, which, of course, they should.

Since the Constitution gives no power whatever to the central government to legislate on or control drugs, no federal drug "laws" can possibly be constitutional, and every DEA arrest and conviction is itself illegal. (Actually, I see no warrant in the Constitution for the federal government even _knowing_ what you possess, much less making it a crime.)

As for state and local governments, they naturally have a wider scope -- but at least one can choose to live in a locality where the prevailing standards are congenial to you.

You're pretty much right on.

Standard AM does have more background noise at low and moderate signal strengths. And the extreme high end, above, say, 10 kHz, is hard to get perfectly flat at some (but not all) directional facilities.

But with analogue AM you can transmit high-fidelity audio with no data compression whatever (and none of its attendant artifacts) in 30 kHz of RF bandwidth. You can't do that with IBOC of either the AM or FM varieties.

And with standard analogue AM, no de-emphasis need be used on the receiving end, so high frequencies that are 100 per cent. modulated come through at full level on the receiving end. You can't do that with pre-emphasized FM.

When WEAM 1390 in Arlington ran its progressive format in the 1970s, they used very modest amounts of optical compression and peak limiting, and subtle equalization -- and they sounded absolutely stunning on my McKay Dymek AM5 tuner.

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

The big boys pushed IBOC because they wanted to do whatever they could to _prevent_ the creation of a new all-digital band. They feared that such a new band would level the playing field so the small broadcaster would have just as good coverage as they did. That was an intolerable and frightening idea to them.

The idea was to ultimately retire analog FM entirely, thus enabling iBiquity to capture a royalty on every bit of material on the FM band. iBiquity understated the amount of IBOC signal necessary to achieve "equivalent" coverage with the stations' FM signals so that it could get its foot in the door.

When it became apparent that -20db was inadequate (even though there was still major interference with analog signals), they lobbied for -10db. That was an "oops" of an order of magnitude. They got -14db instead, but the deleterious effects on analog FM at that level remains to be seen, since most stations have yet to take advantage of it.

Lower power would be fine, if DAB had better error correction.

Although there is one situation where low power DAB works well, that is in the middle of an SFN with signals coming in from several different directions. This isn't much use however in the outer areas of a local multiplex.

No, you don't have to do anything. If you were interested in understanding the technology of IBOC rather than making uninformed comments about it, it would be a wise thing to do. But apparently you're content to talk about things you "know" that aren't actually true. Whatever lights your board.

That's part of it, but they also did not want to have to pay for the additional spectrum on a new band.

For all the misinformation that our favorite troll promulgates here, the fact is that FM IBOC works very well indeed. There have been very few complaints about interference, and the few complaints that there were, were found to have no merit because the interference occurred outside the protected contour (though this was before the power increase was granted).

I'm sure our favorite troll is well aware of what this law firm is doing. There is no lawsuit, and there is unlikely to be one. They are trying to see if they can wrangle some kind of money from BMW and other automakers.

I know as much as I need to know.

Spectrally in efficient.
Causes interference to other services.
Is used at bit rates so low that sound quality can't possibly be anything better than horrible.

First of all, you wrote in lots of words that are not there. That's your interpretation, and has little to do with my point.

The Constitution does not guarantee that the majority's will rules.
If it did, it would not have set up a Republic with the two houses of Congress structured differently, a single person with power of approval and veto, and a judiciary system that could override everything. That was my point. The founders recognized that "shoot-from-the-hip" rule by majority would and could be unjust and dangerous to minorities.

Do you feel that if you repeat this often enough it will become true? I have repeatedly told you that KKDV, Walnut Creek, whose primary 60dbu contour encompasses Berkeley and part of Oakland is unlistenable due to interference from the IBOC signal from KSJO, San Jose. I have documentation an inch thick on this issue. I have mentioned it here a dozen times. Your response is to wait a few weeks saying nothing, and then repeat your canned, unsupported nonsense above.

Trolls are one thing; broadcast engineers such as Dave Barnett, Patty Winter, and others including myself are real people with real experience with regard to IBOC. How glib of you to include all of us with the trolls.

I have most of the trolls killfiled, so I wouldn't know about whom you are speaking. But to dismiss real, working radio engineers (who have absolutely no vested interest in the failure of IBOC, and even have much to gain by its success) claiming incompetence or devious intent is intellectually dishonest and reflects more upon yourself than on us.

Please do let us know when you are ready to address the issues we have repeatedly brought up regarding IBOC in some worthy manner rather than waiting a few weeks and then dismissing it in general with your usual unsupported generalization.

Did it have a choice of wide/narrow filters?

By the way, your ham radio signal always had superb audio. Did you use

It's kind of like the HD Radio Alliance's ads, millions of them, that keep pounding listeners, and trolls like Fartz ans SMS who keep pounding sand. I just read your thread on moderated.ba and feel a bit guilty. With Keefe Bartels visiting my blog starting back in May (at the time I had no clue who they were), my work is really done, as the landslide has now started. Fartz and SMS can keep spamming, but it will make no difference. The only thing that matters are the articles that I link to on my blog, to further fuel the Keefe Bartels investigation and iBiquity's downfall. Hell, after three years, I really don't need to post backlinks anymore, as I have literally trashed the Internet with thousands of backlinks and comments. AM5, (still have and use one daily) is more about good audio than it was about DX. That said, with a very good external antenna, DX was certainly possible. But the IF was too wide in both modes.

I agree that the federal government has waaay too much power and authority over our lives; power and authority that is NOT in the Constitution - not even close; power and authority it just miraculously pulled out of it's ass. We've lost the idea of individual states bound together under a very limited central government who's main purpose is to provide a common military defense against foreign invaders (such as Mexico who is currently invading the Southwest while "our" government sits paralyzed for fear of appearing "racist") and to provide common foreign diplomacy and trade laws. Individual states and cities should have most of the regulatory and legislative power, and said laws should reflect the will and needs of the MAJORITY racial/religious group in each state and city. That would provide the maximum freedom for local populations and would be MUCH preferable to the thuggish "tyranny of the minority" we suffer under today, where the majority White population are 2nd class citizens who are forced, even sometimes at gunpoint, to assist in the destruction of their own civilization and culture.

Just because the bought-and-paid-for FCC says the complaints have "no merit" doesn't mean they don't have merit.

Many people, myself included, listened to stations far outside their so-called "protected contours" for the vastly increased choice it offered (and invested in superior equipment for doing so). Now that possibility is trashed by multiple IBOC white noise generators completely wiping out adjacent channels for scores of miles in every direction, and all for "digital audio" that is largely inferior to that of my $12.95 car mp3 player.

Radio is far more than just listening to local stations, even though that is "where the money is." The attitude that "we can do anything as long as you can still hear OK within the protected contour" is that same attitude that tolerates four billion digital electronics trash generators making the AM and HF bands a literal sea of buzzing garbage 24 hours a day, as long as the station down the street can still be heard. That shouldn't be allowed; our standards should be much higher.

And _all kinds_ of radio listeners, from sophisticated distance listeners to the old lady and her K-Mart clock radio would have benefited from a dedicated digital band.

Just think. All the 250-Watt and 1-kW daytimers could have had 24-hour coverage equal to that of the big blowtorches. Full quieting and excellent audio quality. And more room would have opened up on the analogue AM and FM bands as stations moved. And improved technology could have opened up a multitude of new channels for public service and noncommercial niche broadcasters.

But no. We can't have that. It would erase the inferiority of our competitor's signals.

So, enter the interference-causing inferior kludge called IBOC.

What a joke. Only in America.

Best wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

We used to have an engineering-oriented FCC that took its responsibility seriously. Now, it is more interested in revenue and Janet Jackson's breasts than it is in having the public served. It is amazing how many people do not understand that just because the FCC is ignoring the complaints does not mean the interference doesn't exist.

There is a significantly large number of cases of interference within the contours as well. Used to be that when that happened, all hell broke loose on the offender. Now it is ignored in the name of iBiquity profits.

At least our DAB system over here in the UK doesn't mess up FM

Mainly on good audio. It had a 20+ kHz filter in the wide position and, if I recall correctly, about an 8 kHz in the narrow position. I also used the tabletop tiltable and rotatable companion loop antenna, and it was fun to do some hi-fi "DXing" on occasion.

Thanks! Here's what I used in the 90s:

Kenwood TS440S transceiver with modified audio and second IF filter bypassed

Peavey 1200 mic preamp/mixer

Electro-Voice 664 dynamic microphone (or AKG CE451 condenser)

Pacific Recorders Multimax 3-band optical agc/compressor, modified for HF by lowering the upper crossover frequency and speeding up release

RCA BA-146 peak limiter, modified for fast release and adjusted to just barely trigger on peaks

Alpha 77D RF power amplifier (single 8877)

Monitor Electronics (military surplus) antenna coupler, at base of 150' total length Marconi antenna (60' vertical, 90' horizontal), held up by trees and with 8 rather irregular radials

Actually, McKay claimed 6khz narrow filter. My experience is that the skirts are sufficiently gentle that effective bandwidth is considerably greater than 6khz if the receiver is aligned correctly.
(Not a task for the technically hamhanded. It takes a good ear, a light touch and some considerable patience to align the receiver. If you have the right equipment.)

> I also > used the tabletop tiltable and rotatable companion loop antenna, and it

I put my DA-5 in a very quiet part of the building, and make sure the A/C is heavily filtered of spikes, noise and other anomalies.

Being a shielded loop, it's astonishingly good at isolating the desired signal from noise. You can put it in a room full of RCA round tube color TV sets, and listen to AM radio.

It's good at nulling out undesired signals. Sadly, it's not so good at removing IBOC hash.

If you're going to follow a compressor, even a multiband, with a limiter, you don't want the compressor to be too fast on release.
They'll tend to fight with each other. Expecially a PR&E Multimax is plenty fast from the factory, but not so fast it will compete with the following limiter producing some very unpleasant audio artifacts.

Run 10db of max compression with the PR&E, into a broadcast limiter of fast attack and release and a max of 5db of peak gain reduction, you'll never hear it working, but you'll have very tightly controlled peaks, and very smooth, but punchy audio.

If you get back on the air again, I might suggest that you find an Aphex Compellor, as your compressor, followed by a mulitband limiter like a Studio Dominator for your peak limiting stage. A 305 Compellor is fairly transparent, on the air, but controls dynamics well, so a limiter can be used with some discretion. A 320 Compellor can allow you to dial in parameters more to your taste than a 305.

The Studio Dominator is a brick wall limiter, with three bands of EQ before the limiter. Allowing some pretty crunchy audio, if you wish, or very clean but very tightly controlled dynamics, more to your tastes. And some trimming of spectral curves for some, pardon the pun, compelling listening.

Both can be had on the used market for a few hundred. And both can be easily modified (the Compellor, with internal jumpers) to your choice of operating level environments.

You REALLY used an AKG 451 on the ham bands?

Damn, Kevin. That's something I though only I would do.

Try a beyerdynamic 834 some time. You'll need a good blast filter, but you'll be amazed at your audio on the air.

IBOC : A Broadcast System : Designed To Jam
the Fringe-Distant Competition

It is the IBOC Signal that effects the Broadcasting Radio Station Itself.

It's the IBOC Signal Side-Bands that effectively JAMS Both the Adjacent Channels for 10+ kHz at 1% and 20+ kHz at 10%

The result is AM/MW Radio DX is 'o-u-t' with IBOC and Local AM/MW Radio Stations have a Lock-on the Local Broadcast Market by JAMMING all the Fringe and Distant Adjacent Channels by using IBOC.

IBOC a System that Allows you to Jam the next door neighboring Metro Area's Radio Competition right out of Your Local Radio Market

Well with SMS constantly spamming us with Pro HD-Radio stuff, it's not necessarily a bad thing to get some anti HD-Radio stuff, to add some balance.

- For all the misinformation that our favorite troll promulgates here,
the

That is because FM Radio has a well defined and which can go far farther then authorized on a nightly basis each and every night.

Plus FM Radio has NO large legacy culture of DXers

What many call a balun is not, it is an RF auto-transformer; The common schematic on the net uses a 10 turn primary with a 29-30 turn secondary;
This is an auto-transformer, but it works fine in matching an an antenna in place of a 9:1 balun, for general SWL.

A 9:1 auto-transformer:
http://www.dxzone.com/cgi-bin/dir/jump2.cgi?ID=12673

A true 9:1 balun (schematic down on the page):
http://users.belgacom.net/hamradio/schemas/Magnetic%20Longwire%20Balun_MLB.htm

One importance difference you will notice, the auto-transformer has two windings, the cold ends of the two windings running to gnd/coax-braid. The balun has three windings, or a trifilar winding, these 3 windings are connected in series with the 50 ohm connection across one winding, the high impedance connection is made across all 3 windings. Transmission Line Transformer is also used to describe some types of baluns. Baluns are frequently wound using coax for the windings ... etc.

In the above, I have made no difference between balun and unun, there is a difference, and most often you find ununs employed in SWL, with monopoles--unbalanced antennas. Baluns are utilized with dipoles--balanced antennas.

I forgot to mention, the 50 ohms sounds more than "just a coincidence" to me. I am willing to bet they worked a 50 ohm resistance in there somewhere ... it would be very interesting to see a schematic of that and see how they did it, and for what purpose.

It is possible, unless you can see ferrite material, toroid or bar, that your "balun" is ripoff!

| Just think. All the 250-Watt and 1-kW daytimers could have had
| 24-hour coverage equal to that of the big blowtorches. Full quieting

Not only that, but broadcasters have become dependent upon leveraging the various forms of arbitrage made possible by today's patchwork system, as well as exploiting the obsolete adherence to the concept of city-of-license (par contre, licensing based on market served would be much more logical and reflective of how things actually work).

Making everyone more-or-less equal would have wiped all that out.
It would not do for KEST to have the same coverage as KNBR, just to pick a comparative example at random.

MAC - 6924.6 kHz AM - 0230UT tune in - 0303UT s/off with the national anthem. The Ultraman show with host Ultraman with sound effects, clips from stuff like Three Stooges, what sounded like a home grown instrumental, and recorded music - only one channel though - unfortunately in a couple of cases the missing channel had the vocal. MAC played the US national anthem, not to be confused with CYOT which usually plays the Canadian National Anthem.

Unidentified - (so far) - 6925USB -- pirate playing instrumental music

The trouble with streaming the existing terrestrial radio stations is...well...you are listening to the existing terrestrial radio stations. Forty minutes of programming if you don't count the news and commercials. SiriusXM understands programming. They may not understand much else, oh like how to make money, but the content is good. Other than NPR, how much terrestrial radio do you want to hear?

Put it this way, I have to think when the last time I fired up iheartradio. Probably for Tom Hartman. Don't get me wrong, I stream a lot of radio, but mostly NPR, BBC, and a few internet stations with a low or zero commercial load. OK, and John Rothman....

Regardless of whether you use the 9:1 impedance transformer as a, 'unun' or a balun, the obvious way of winding it is to wind it trifilar by filling the ring with N turns, then interwinding with a further N turns (so the wires never cross), then finally interwinding a further N turns.
That isn't made clear in the DXzone article.

The ON6MU balun seems to be wound with purpose made trifilar wire, rather than ordinary off-the-shelf single wire, interwound. [Or maybe it's just wound very, very carefully!] Some Cable TV equipment used to use ready-made wire (both bifilar and trifilar) for the windings of their miniature wideband torroidal 'transmission line' RF transformers.
There were typically 5 turns around the ring, and they were normally connected as 2:1 turns ratio (4:1 impedance) or 3:2 turns ratio (2.25 impedance).

Whether the transformer ends up as a balun or an unun simply depends on how you connect the windings, and where you make the external connections.

I think the author was attempting to end up with a transmission line on the balun with a specific characteristic impedance in mind ... I am taking it for granted he measured the impedance of the transmission line of twisted conductors and it benefited the frequency bandwidth of the balun, or other characteristics, in a way which he found desirable, in such applications the spiral turns of the conductors are usually stipulated in "turns per inch" (TPI) ... however, he could have just done it "because it looked kewl." lol

The permeability of the ferrite/iron material of the balun will dictate the number of turns to function correctly, mostly. If someone is unfamiliar with how to compute this, I would suggest they follow a given design, of course. To effectively choke off the rf flowing on the outside of the coax, common mode, the balun must present sufficient impedance to the flow of current, at the frequency(s) in question, of course ... and of course, balun size/mass is determined by power requirements (transmitting applications)--generally not even of concern in receiving applications, and balun size ends up being dictated by necessary turns/core-permeability.

Of course, you "have" to know if you want to match a balanced ant or an unbalanced one ... baluns are both very simple and a "rabbit hole", like everything else, it depends on how deep you want to go ...

JS

Yes, well, "ignorance is bliss" (related to KISS), as a motto, is a usable tool, I suppose ...

However, Ians' pointing out of some of the more "esoteric" properties/potentials of "simple impedance matching" tools will not be wasted on those with deeper interests, I am sure. For others, purchasing one, off the shelf, and ready-made, would free one of having to know how to construct one which is capable of excellent performance.

And, a simple but immediate benefit of baluns vs. transformers is quite obvious, they are more broad-banded ... I would think the importance of that would not be wasted, on most ...

When were those stations and their out-of area listeners guaranteed that they'd be able to be received far outside their protected contour forever? The protected contours are there for a reason. Whatever changes are made that don't affect a station's protected contour are fair game. I liken it to a customer who calls me and complains that they've been violating a chip's specs for years with no problem, but the latest shipment they received only operates at 75% over the maximum ratings, while the previous ones worked at 100% over the maximum ratings, and wants to know if we can build him some more of the older design.

I find all the lies about IBOC fascinating, from the complaints about audio quality from those that have never listened to an HD station, to the ones that claim that the FCC was bribed to approve IBOC. Never any evidence of course.

Our favorite troll is a fascinating study in cluelessness. Does he actually believe that a law firm trolling for class action suits will have even the slightest effect on the success or failure of digital radio?

Shoehorning in another station is one thing.

Allowing, and even encouraging, existing stations to make their signals multiple times wider with gigantic white noise generators is quite another.

It's the same mentality that says that requiring switching power supplies to have sufficient filtering so that no audible noise is produced on nearby sensitive AM receivers is "too expensive" -- and that, to save the Chinese factories and importers a few cents, we're just going to accept turning the AM and HF bands into a sea of buzzing noises.

After all, the locals can still be heard inside their "protected contours"! Anything else is "fair game." Right?

So just take the pristine bands -- where you used to be able to hear galactic noise when signals weren't present, and even the weakest signals were a joy to listen to if you had a good antenna and receiver -- and fill them up with digital hash.

Fair game? I call it very bad engineering. I call it gross misuse of a natural resource. And I call it sick.

It isn't a lie that IBOC is an inferior system whose only rational justification is that the money-men wanted to preserve their superiority in the existing tiered power hierarchy.

You don't want to hear the simple truth: no broadcast system can sound properly at 40 or 48 kbps. Both Sirius and HD use rates like that, or less. And therefore they sound bad. I've heard them both and yes: in practice even on a rental car stereo they do not match the FM produced by the same receiver and speakers.

FACT: The Jews have been expelled from almost every Western country at one time or another, including Britain, Spain, France, Portugal and Germany.

FACT: Virtually all the major media outlets, including TV networks, newspapers, movie studios and book publishers, are owned or controlled by Jews.

FACT: The major media incessantly harps on any white-on-black crime (such as the Jasper TX dragging), yet ignores the much greater number of black- on-white crimes which are equally horrific yet happen FAR MORE FREQUENTLY.

FACT: Communism was a largely-Jewish phenomenon. Almost all the top communists of the Russian Revolution were Jews, as well as almost all the atomic spies, and the Revolution was financed in large measure by Wall Street Jews.

FACT: In the late 1920s the Communist Party USA decided on a policy of destroying American society by pushing 'racial equality'.

FACT: The NAACP was founded principally by Jews, and Jews remained in charge of the organization till 1970.

FACT: Most of the 'Orthodox Jewish version' of the Holocaust is false, (and in fact is significantly based on 'confessions' of Germans at the Nuremberg Military Tribunal obtained under torture), and numerous Jewish scholars have actually acknowledged this. (The stories acknowledged by Jewish scholars to be false include the existence of homicidal gas chambers, the use of Jewish skin for lampshade coverings and Jewish body fat for soap, and the assertion that there were 'Six Million' Jews killed by the nazis.) But questioning these widely-believed but false stories is illegal in most countries of the Western world, and 8,000 people are in jail in Germany alone for questioning these and similar dogmas. Can you figure out what powerful international ethnic group was responsible for causing these laws to be passed?

FACT: Sympathy and guilt for the (largely false) story of the Holocaust has resulted in the payment of close to a hundred billion dollars to Israel by the German government. Furthermore, Jews everywhere continue to use the Holocaust as a tool for extracting money from gentiles, whether thru the movies (more than 400 have been made on this subject), Holocaust museums, 'reparations' (more than a billion from the Swiss, billions from German companies, etc) and the like. There is a saying widely used among Jews which goes, "There's no business like Shoah [Holocaust] business." Can you figure out why the Jewish establishment has been so eager to suppress questioning of the Holocau$$$t dogma?

FACT: Israel is the only 'Western' country to legally sanction torture, and the Israeli Defense Forces use bone-breaking and shoot-to-maim policies against Palestinians, and even reporters.

FACT: Jewish political influence has been the principal force attempting to nullify our Constitution, and particularly the freedoms enjoyed under the Bill of Rights. For example, Jews have been the major force behind 'gun control' (ie, the attempt to nullify the Second Amendment), integration and affirmative action (to nullify freedom of association), 'hate crimes' (laying the foundation for suppressing freedom of speech), immigration (introducing large numbers of unassimilable nonwhites which will effectively destroy American culture and ideals), anti-militia statutes and similar efforts.

John "mentions" lots of things that are of questionable validity. If there is IBOC interference to a protected signal then a complaint needs to be filed with the FCC. I searched the FCC database of complaints and couldn't find any complaint about this for KKDV. The procedure for filing complaints can be found at "http://www.fcc.gov/eb/broadcast/interference.html".

That's a codec problem. With currently available codecs, you can get FM radio quality with 64k with AAC (aka MP4 audio). This is roughly equivalent to 128k MP3, which is good enough for a car radio or tiny earphones, but not CD or even CRO2 Dolby cassete quality.

Since I don't know what codec they use, I can't say what they need to increase their bit rates to, but assuming they do (or could) use AAC, they would have to cut their number of channels by as much as one third to compensate for the higher bit rate.

I'm well aware of the street address for filing general interference complaints.

Something you would know if you actually worked in broadcasting:

Station owners in a market do not casually file interference complaints against their fellow broadcasters. It just isn't done except in rare instances. It is a last resort which occurs only after the interfering station has exhibited absolutely no willingness to cooperate or participate in a solution, and even then the commission turns around and tells the parties to make yet another attempt at reconciliation.

Clear Channel has bent over backwards to assist us and others in tracking down and quantifying interference and other situations. We have a magnificent relationship with the local people here. In any given market, cooperation is the name of the game.

No useful purpose would be served at this time by putting this on record with the FCC as a complaint against a fellow broadcaster who is complying with current guidelines. There are other FCC portals which are far more effective for registering procedural complaints, particularly those involving the formal complaint process through counsel. You WILL find those complaints on file, if you know where to look and what to look for.

Your assertion has been that interference within protected contours was not occurring. I have evidence that it does in at least three cases. As has been pointed out, the FCC's inaction and lack of acknowledgement that such interference exists does not mean that it isn't happening. You're welcome to take calibrated receivers and spectrum analyzer out into the field and prove me wrong. As I recall, I have offered to take anyone out into the field and demonstrate the situation, live and in person.

When do you want to go?

They use a ten-year-old, AAC-derivative codec in non-updatable hardware.
Many of today's codecs are greatly superior to the codec installed in every "HD Radio" ever made.

It's a trade-off to be sure. But even now, every independent test of HD Radio has shown the claims of improved sound quality over FM to be true. Too many people don't understand that the proper Codec can provide excellent quality audio at bit rates that digital radio employs.

The issue is also the definition of "CD Quality." In a vehicle, where most radio listening is done, you're not going to be able to tell much of a difference between HD Radio and CD unless your vehicle has a very high end sound system. Similarly, FM Radio is often of poor quality in a vehicle due to multipath. Drive on 280 from Cupertino until about San Bruno, and the multipath is horrendous (though until stations increase their HD power you can't get HD for much of that stretch at all).

So the FCC set up procedures for reporting interference, including from HD Radio, and the stations being interfered with would rather complain about it on Usenet rather than file a legitimate complaint. If you think this tack will stop HD Radio then you're going to be very disappointed.

I had an HH Scott AM/FM "stereo" tuner. It had AM on the Right and FM sounded better than the FM.

Natural rights are inherent. That's what makes them unalienable. No one can take them away because no one granted them.

"Nature" and "Nature's God" are just more fluff the great unwashed. The founders were very skeptical about the idea of living gods.

Come on! Have you ever listened to this digital system? There is no codec in the world that provides FM like quality at the bitrates digital radio employs. And the HD radio codec isn't even among the best.

No, FM radio is the norm for broadcasting. HD radio does not even provide FM-like quality, so there is absolutely no issue with the definition of CD quality.

I'm not interested in stopping HD Radio. It will rise or fall on its own. I'm just having fun here. "HD Radio" has already begun its very slow death; what is said here makes no difference at all. Nothing said here makes any difference, which is the point I've been trying to make. Broadcasting occurs at radio stations not on Usenet. I deal with broadcasting every single day.

You claimed that interference inside protected contours didn't exist, but now you seem to be shifting to discussion of the interference complaint procedure (which all broadcasters know is a total sham). You even toss in the Washington street address for filing general complaints to the FCC. None of that is relevant. IBOC interference exists, and I can prove it to you. Apparently, you are not really interested in defending your original assertion.

So be it.

Unfortunately, "HD Radio" uses an obsolete codec that is not upgradeable. All I can say about "independent tests" is that the way to evaluate sound quality is to listen for yourself, not read someone else's subjective evaluation. Buy what you like, not what someone tells you that you should like.

You tell people that they should read the "experts'" opinions. I tell people they should listen for themselves. I can see your point, however.

Sounds like you need a better radio. I am intrigued, however, at your definition of "CD Quality". I essence, you are saying that anything is CD Quality as long as it is being evaluated through crappy gear that adds so much coloration that even trained ears can't hear the improvement that CD quality provides.

As long as the car's environment, along with bad quality amplifiers and speakers are the chief impediment to quality sound, any programming source is "CD Quality".

Wow! Learn something every day.

Actually only about 30% of total radio listening is done in the car. 95% of people listen in the car, but that's different than saying most listening is done in the car.

Adding up the total minutes of time spent listening, only about 30% of listening is in-car.

Put another way, 70% of radio listening is done where sound systems and lower noise environments can accentuate the shortcomings of HD vs FM radio.

- I had an HH Scott AM/FM "stereo" tuner.
- It had AM on the Right and FM on the left.
- The AM had a switchable 10 megacycles notch filter.

?Q? - 10 MHz Notch Filter ? -or- 10 kHz Notch Filter !

- It sounded better than the FM.

3157. R70 Question

Hi, i just purchased an ICOM R70 and have a question. Could someone please tell me if the 455kHz filter used in the third I.F. Needs to be the same width as the second I.F.? For example, if I put an Inrad 2.1 or even 1.8 kHz filter (third IF) with the stock 2.3 kHz second IF filter what would be the result of the PBT? Would it be better to replace both IF filters (SSB) with Inrads for better selectivity or should I just leave the stock 9 MHz filter in place? Thanks!

Well, a business HAS to reinvest a percentage of it's income to assure future income. Would ten percent be out of line? The wages they pay go down when the economy stinks. The dregs line up at the door. A few of them would be killing for free if they had to.

The only reason there was a famine in Ireland was because the English were taking all the food away. It was ethnic cleansing. Over 5 million Irish died as a result.

Check the map by clicking on it. The ports where the food was loaded on ships are shown, along with mass graves.

I believe it will work fine with just one improved filter, assuming that the Inrad really has a better shape factor. Having better shape factors on both would aid in interference rejection in some situations, of course.

I've never used an R70, but I couldn't recommend setting it up so that your SSB bandwidth is significantly narrower than stock at all times. Ultra-narrow audio is fatiguing to listen to and is _less_ understandable in most situations.

My own preference would be to go with a wider SSB filter (for clearer audio and better intelligibility), but one with excellent shape factor and ultimate rejection.

I like adjusting the carrier point so that I can get audio down below 100 Hz and have a filter significantly wider than 3 kHz for all listening except when there's very bad adjacent channel interference, in which case I'd temporarily use a narrower filter or narrow it up with bandpass tuning.

Preferences vary.

With every good wish,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

It can only be AMENDED upon consent of the VAST majority

This design can be expanded to a 9:1 by simply using two trifilar windings in place of the two bifilar windings, and making proper connection of the windings.

http://www.home.earthlink.net/~christrask/Trask4to1Balun.pdf

I suspect a gain in performance would be had with most, if not all, antennas in common use. And, as the text points out, grounding the correct side of the secondary series windings will allow the balun to be used as an UNUN.

The 3rd IF is 455 KHz. The SSB ceramic filter is good.I don't think it needs to be upgraded (believe it is Murata metal CFx455x series). The AM ceramic is too wide and has poor -6/-60 shape factor. As far as I remember,Inrad doesn't have any small size filters like the original Muratas, just the larger 2nd IF at 9.01xx MHz. The original FL-xx series are quite decent. And they cost an arm and a leg because they are crystal ones.That applies to both (Inrad and Icom). KIWA had some moderately priced ceramic filters at 455KHz . Make shure they match the pcb holes before buying them. This is critical . Using wire jumpers in rf circuit (even shielded) may lead to excessive signal bleedthrough and defeat the whole purpose of doing it. R-70 had pretty high specs for it's time. Enjoy!

Anyone transmitting at a time such as that would be running very limited power, likely no more than a couple hundred watts (the max power output of a common ham mobile rig that can be run from 12V battery power), since it would be likely that no commercial power would be available.

Sort of like a Farmer in the 1920s who bought a "Farm Radio"; and when his Son asked him 'why' the Farmer replied 'why' Son some day we will have elect-tric-city just like your Uncle in the City.

Actually so-called "Farm Radios" were usually powered by Batteries and some/many Farms had their own Electrical Generating Systems.

I checked online for the R70 user manual, and it indeed uses the CFJ455K5. I then fount this chart: http://jlkolb.cts.com/site/curves/CFJ455K5.PDF giving a plot of its performance (though not its ultimate rejection).
I'll see how it works before spending any additional money for an upgrade.

Our government is us. If it's fucked-up it's because we are fucked-up.
We know this already, but suppress the truth. This makes us neurotic.
Any flaw you see in the "government" reflects a flaw in the collective "we".

"We" need to embrace what we have in common, and use that as a basis for carefully studying what WE THINK separates us.
If we do not hang together than we shall certainly hang separately.

It was a strike-slip event. I'm moving toward San Francisco at a rate of 3 inches a year, but I've been stuck since 1857. That's about 10 meters, which could all be made up in less than a minute. I am 11 miles from to say.

To say the suface of the Earth "lurched" is imprecise and unscientific.

Don't be silly. As long as there are PV arrays there will be radio of some kind. AM radio is the only kind you can receive without batteries.

You have to have a resonant circuit tuned slightly off the FM carrier frequency. The detector then converts (complex math here) some of the FM to a voltage. This is called "slope detection".

Nobody said anything about "Doomsday". The house of cards is coming down. The infrastructure is failing as it is being privatized. Our awakening star will spew and cripple the grids, and they will be slow to recover (if ever). Crop failures are starting civil unrest globally; there are strikes in Europe as the corporations tighten their grip. The last thing you want is a government with an off-on switch on your electronic media.

Doomsday? We should be so lucky.

I have a standalone WiFi radio tuner (Myine IRA), which uses an RF link from my router. It is connected to a Whole House Gold FM transmitter with the antenna taped to a picture window. I get a good 500' to 1,000', depending. I have half a dozen FM radios all over the house listening sometimes. None loud.

KPFT is a fully licensed full-power broadcasting station.

How is this NOT radio?

Actually, I used 9:1 when I should have used 16:1. For a 9:1, you would still construct the balun with the trifilar windings. However, the "last" two windings (one from each side) would be tapped, roughly, on 1/2 of their turns and these two points used to supply the 9:1 output point.

What I like best about these two articles "side-by-side" is that the later article shows why an evenly and fully wound core is superior to the partially wound core with the windings separate - due to loss of field intersect when the core is not fully covered. Love this, thanks

I would add that the Kiwas have decent shape factors and ultimate rejection, in my experience with a Kiwa-modded R75 (although the R75 uses a 450 kHz IF).

San Andreas Fault? I've heard of that. Didn't they build nuclear reactors on that thing because the real estate was so darn reasonably priced?

The Riddle of the Jew's Success
F. Roderich-Stoltheim (T. Fritsch)

This rare and valuable book provides a detailed analysis of Jewish behavior and thinking. A reprint of the English-language edition of 1927. After Germany's defeat in 1945, this book was banned by the Allied occupation authorities, and nearly all copies were destroyed.
Written by the influential German publicist Theodor Fritsch, it appeared under a pen name. This book helps in understanding the scope and intensity of anti-Jewish feeling in Germany during the 1920s and 1930s.

Here are some quotes:

"When in the year 1890, a petition was sent from the anti-Jewish camp to a number of Imperial and local authorities, containing the request that a commission of independent savants should be appointed, whose duty would be to examine carefully the passages in dispute, in not a single instance was the request granted. The Prussian Ministry of Culture dismissed any such step as 'impracticable'. If one compares the thoroughness with which the morality of the Jesuits has been and is still discussed in public, one if forced to accept the view, that the zealous friends of truth and opponents of those, who work in an obscure and devious manner, know how to restrain their zeal for enlightenment in a truly remarkable way so far as the Jews are concerned.

The position is thus a very peculiar one. This much is established: The German national representative bodies and governments have given the Jews equal civic rights, and have recognized them as a separate religious community, without making any inquiry whether the moral instruction of the Jews is compatible with the welfare of the state."

"Many people consider themselves very clever when they impart advice to the merchant, who complains he is unable to hold his own against the Jews: do the same as the Jew! In reality this amounts to the following: do not recognize any religious motives whatever in your mode of doing business, and descend to the level of a low money-grubber and voluptary.
The economic principle of the Jew threatens to trample under foot, in our time, all the higher principles of life."

Here is part of the Leuchter Report:
"Thirty-one samples were selectively removed from the alleged gas chambers at Kremas I, II, III, IV and V. A control sample was taken from delousing facility #1 at Birkenau. The control sample was removed from a delousing chamber in a location where cyanide was known to have been used and was apparently present as blue staining. Chemical testing of the control sample #32 showed a cyanide content of 1050 mg/kg, a very heavy concentration. The conditions at areas from which these samples were taken are identical with those of the control sample, cold, dark, and wet. Only Kremas IV and V differed, in the respect that these locations had sunlight (the buildings have been torn down) and sunlight may hasten the destruction of uncomplexed cyanide. The cyanide combines with the iron in the mortar and brick and becomes ferric-ferro-cyanide or prussian blue pigmentation, a very stable iron-cyanide complex.
"The locations from which the analyzed samples were removed are set out in Table III.

"It is notable that almost all the samples were negative and that the few that were positive were very close to the detection level (1mg/kg); 6.7 mg/kg at Krema III; 7.9 mg/kg at Krerma I. The absense of any consequential readings at any of the tested locations as compared to the control sample reading 1050 mg/kg supports the evidence that these facilities were not execution gas chambers. The small quantities detected would indicate that at some point these buildings were deloused with Zyklon B - as were all the buildings at all these facilities"

by Theodore J. O'Keefe

Nothing has been more effective in establishing the authenticity of the Holocaust story in the minds of Americans than the terrible scenes US troops discovered when they entered German concentration camps at the close of World War II.

At Dachau, Buchenwald, Dora, Mauthausen, and other work and detention camps, horrified US infantrymen encountered heaps of dead and dying inmates, emaciated and diseased. Survivors told them hair-raising stories of torture and slaughter, and backed up their claims by showing the GIs crematory ovens, alleged execution gas chambers, supposed implements of torture, and even shrunken heads and lampshades, gloves, and handbags purportedly made from skin flayed from dead inmates.

US government authorities, mindful that many Americans who remembered the atrocity stories fed them during World War I still doubted the Allied propaganda directed against the Hitler regime, resolved to "document" what the GIs had found in the camps. Prominent newsmen and politicians were flown in to see the harrowing evidence, while the US Army Signal Corps filmed and photographed the scenes for posterity. Famous journalist Edward R. Murrow reported, in tones of horror, but no longer of disbelief, what he had been told and shown, and Dachau and Buchenwald were branded on the hearts and minds of the American populace as names of infamy unmatched in the sad and bloody history of this planet.

For Americans, what was "discovered" at the camps -- the dead and the diseased, the terrible stories of the inmates, all the props of torture and terror -- became the basis not simply of a transitory propaganda campaign but of the conviction that, yes, it was true: the Germans did exterminate six million Jews, most of them in lethal gas chambers.

What the GIs found was used, by way of films that were mandatory viewing for the vanquished populace of Germany, to "re-educate" the German people by destroying their national pride and their will to a united, independent national state, imposing in their place overwhelming feelings of collective guilt and political impotence. And when the testimony, and the verdict, of the Nuremberg Tribunal incorporated most, if not all, of the horror stories Americans were told about Dachau, Buchenwald, and other places captured by the US Army, the Holocaust could pass for one of the most documented, one of the most authenticated, one of the most proven historical episodes in the human record.

A Different Reality

But it is known today that, very soon after the liberation of the camps, American authorities were aware that the real story of the camps was quite different from the one in which they were coaching military public information officers, government spokesmen, politicians, journalists, and other mouthpieces.

When American and British forces overran western and central Germany in the spring of 1945, they were followed by troops charged with discovering and securing any evidence of German war crimes.

Among them was Dr. Charles Larson, one of America's leading forensic pathologists, who was assigned to the US Army's Judge Advocate General's Department. As part of a US War Crimes Investigation Team, Dr. Larson performed autopsies at Dachau and some twenty other German camps, examining on some days more than 100 corpses. After his grim work at Dachau, he was questioned for three days by US Army prosecutors.

Dr. Larson's findings? In an 1980 newspaper interview he said: "What we've heard is that six million Jews were exterminated. Part of that is a hoax." And what part was the hoax? Dr. Larson, who told his biographer that to his knowledge he "was the only forensic pathologist on duty in the entire European Theater" of Allied military operations, confirmed that "never was a case of poison gas uncovered."

Typhus, Not Poison Gas

If not by gassing, how did the unfortunate victims at Dachau, Buchenwald and Bergen-Belsen perish? Were they tortured to death or deliberately starved? The answers to these questions are known as well.

As Dr. Larson and other Allied medical men discovered, the chief cause of death at Dachau, Belsen and the other camps was disease, above all typhus, an old and terrible scourge of mankind that until recently flourished in places where populations were crowded together in circumstances where public health measures were unknown or had broken down. Such was the case in the overcrowded internment camps in Germany at war's end, where, despite such measures as systematic delousing, quarantine of the sick and cremation of the dead, the virtual collapse of Germany's food, transport, and public health systems led to catastrophe.

Perhaps the most authoritative statement of the facts as to typhus and mortality in the camps has been made by Dr. John E. Gordon, M.D., Ph.D., a professor of preventive medicine and epidemiology at the Harvard University School of Public Health, who was with US forces in Germany in 1945. Dr. Gordon reported in 1948 that "The outbreaks in concentration camps and prisons made up the great bulk of typhus infection encountered in Germany." Dr. Gordon summarized the causes for the outbreaks as follows:

Germany in the spring months of April and May [1945] was an astounding sight, a mixture of humanity travelling this way and that, homeless, often hungry and carrying typhus with them ...Germany was in chaos. The destruction of whole cities and the path left by advancing armies produced a disruption of living conditions contributing to the spread of the disease. Sanitation was low grade, public utilities were seriously disrupted, food supply and food distribution was poor, housing was inadequate and order and discipline were everywhere lacking. Still more important, a shifting of populations was occurring such as few countries and few times have experienced.

Dr. Gordon's findings are corroborated by Dr. Russell Barton, today a psychiatrist of international repute, who entered Bergen-Belsen with British forces as a young medical student in 1945. Barton, who volunteered to care for the diseased survivors, testified under sworn oath in a Toronto courtroom in 1985 that "Thousands of prisoners who died at the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp during World War II weren't deliberately starved to death but died from a rash of diseases."

Dr. Barton further testified that on entering the camp he had credited stories of deliberate starvation but decided such stories were untrue after inspecting the well equipped kitchens and the meticulously maintained ledgers, dating back to 1942, of food cooked and dispensed each day.

Despite noisily publicized claims and widespread popular notions to the contrary, no researcher has been able to document a German policy of extermination through starvation in the German camps.

No 'Human Skin' Lampshades

What of the ghoulish stories of concentration camp inmates skinned for their tattoos, flayed to make lampshades and handbags, or other artifacts? What of the innumerable "torture racks," "meathooks," whipping posts, gallows, and other tools of torment and death that are reported to have abounded at every German camp? These allegations, and even more grotesque ones proffered by Soviet prosecutors, found their way into the record at Nuremberg.

The lampshade and tattooed-skin charges were made against Ilse Koch, dubbed by journalists the "Bitch of Buchenwald," who was reported to have furnished her house with objects manufactured from the tanned hides of luckless inmates.

But General Lucius Clay, military governor of the US zone of occupied Germany, who reviewed her case in 1948, told his superiors in Washington: "There is no convincing evidence that she [Ilse Koch] selected inmates for extermination in order to secure tattooed skins or that she possessed any articles made of human skin." In an interview General Clay gave years later, he stated about the material for the infamous lampshades: "Well, it turned out actually that it was goat flesh. But at the trial it was still human flesh. It was almost impossible for her to have gotten a fair trial." Ilse Koch hanged herself in a German jail in 1967.

It would be tedious to itemize and refute the thousands of bizarre claims as to Nazi atrocities. That there were instances of German cruelty, however, is clear from the testimony of Dr. Konrad Morgen, a legal investigator attached to the Reich Criminal Police, whose statements on the witness stand at Nuremberg have never been challenged by proponents of the Jewish Holocaust story. Dr. Morgen informed the court that he had been given full authority by Heinrich Himmler, commander of Hitler's SS and the dread Gestapo, to enter any German concentration camp and investigate instances of cruelty and corruption on the part of camp personnel. As he explained in sworn testimony at Nuremberg, Dr. Morgen investigated 800 such cases, resulting in more than 200 convictions. Punishments included the death penalty for the worst offenders, including Hermann Florstedt, commandant of Lublin (Majdanek), and Karl Koch (Ilse's husband), commandant of Buchenwald.

While German camp commandants in certain cases did inflict physical punishment, such acts had to be approved by authorities in Berlin, and it was required that a camp physician first certify the good health of the prisoner to be disciplined, and then be on hand at the actual beating. After all, throughout most of the war the camps were important centers of industrial activity. The good health and morale of the prisoners was critical to the German war effort, as is evidenced in a January 1943 order issued by SS General Richard Glï¿½cks, chief of the office that supervised the concentration camps. It held the camp commanders "personally responsible for exhausting every possibility to preserve the physical strength of the detainees." Camp Survivors: Merely Victims?

US Army investigators, working at Buchenwald and other camps, quickly ascertained what was common knowledge among veteran inmates: that the worst offenders, the cruelest denizens of the camps, were not the guards but the prisoners themselves. Common criminals of the same stripe as those who populate US prisons today committed many villainies, particularly when they held positions of authority, and fanatical Communists, highly organized to combat their many political enemies among the inmates, eliminated their foes with Stalinist ruthlessness. Two US Army investigators at Buchenwald, Egon W. Fleck and Edward A. Tenenbaum, carefully investigated circumstances in the camp before its liberation. In a detailed report submitted to their superiors, they revealed, in the words of Alfred Toombs, their commander, who wrote a preface to the report, "how the prisoners themselves organized a deadly terror within the Nazi terror."

Fleck and Tenenbaum described the power exercised by criminals and Communists as follows:

The trusties, who in time became almost exclusively Communist Germans, had the power of life and death over all other inmates. They could sentence a man or a group to almost certain death ... The Communist trusties were directly responsible for a large part of the brutalities at Buchenwald.

Colonel Donald B. Robinson, chief historian of the American military government in Germany, summarized the Fleck-Tenenbaum report in an article published in an American magazine shortly after the war. Colonel Robinson wrote succinctly of the American investigators' findings: "It appeared that the prisoners who agreed with the Communists ate; those who didn't starved to death."

Additional corroboration of inmate brutality has been provided by Ellis E. Spackman, who, as Chief of Counter-Intelligence Arrests and Detentions for the US Seventh Army, was involved in the liberation of Dachau. Spackman, later a professor of history at San Bernardino Valley College in California, wrote in 1966 that at Dachau "the prisoners were the actual instruments that inflicted the barbarities on their fellow prisoners."

'Gas Chambers'

In December 1944 US Army officers Colonel Paul Kirk and Lt. Colonel Edward J. Gully inspected the German concentration camp at Struthof-Natzweiler in Alsace. They submitted their findings to their superiors at the headquarters of the US 6th Army Group, which subsequently forwarded their report to the US War Crimes Division. While, significantly, the full text of their report has never been published, it has been revealed, by a historian supportive of Holocaust claims, that the two investigators were careful to characterize equipment exhibited to them by French informants as a "so-called lethal gas chamber," and to claim it was "allegedly used as a lethal gas chamber." (Emphasis added)

Both the careful phraseology of the Natzweiler report, and its effective suppression, stand in stark contrast to the credulity, the confusion, and the blaring publicity that accompanied official reports of alleged gas chambers at Dachau. At first, a US Army photo depicting a GI gazing at a steel door marked with a skull and crossbones and the German words for: "Caution! Gas! Mortal danger! Don't open!," was identified as showing the murder weapon.

Later, however, it was evidently decided that the apparatus in question was merely a standard delousing chamber for clothing, and another alleged gas chamber, this one cunningly disguised as a shower room, was exhibited to American congressmen and journalists as the site where thousands breathed their last. While there exist numerous reports in the press as to the operation of this second "gas chamber," no official report by trained Army investigators has yet surfaced to reconcile such problems as the function of the shower heads: Were they "dummies," or did lethal cyanide gas stream through them? (Each theory has appreciable support in journalistic and historiographical literature.)

As with Dachau, so with Buchenwald, Bergen-Belsen, and the other camps liberated by the Allies in western Germany. There was no end of propaganda about "gas chambers," "gas ovens," and the like, but so far not a single detailed description of the murder weapon and its function, not a single report of the kind that is mandatory for the successful prosecution of any assault or murder case in America at that time and today, has come to light.

Furthermore, a number of Holocaust authorities have now publicly decreed that there were no gassings, no extermination camps in Germany after all. (We are now told that "gassing" and "extermination" camps were located exclusively in what is now Poland, in areas captured by the Soviet Red Army and made off-limits to western investigators.)

Dr. Martin Broszat of the Munich-based Institute for Contemporary History, which is funded by the German government, stated categorically in a 1960 letter to the German weekly Die Zeit: "Neither in Dachau nor in Bergen-Belsen nor in Buchenwald were Jews or other prisoners gassed." Professional "Nazi hunter" Simon Wiesenthal stated in 1975 and again in 1993 that "there were no extermination camps on German soil."

Dachau "gas chamber" No. 2, which was once presented to a stunned and grieving world as a weapon that claimed hundreds of thousands of lives, is now described in the brochure issued to tourists at the modern Dachau "memorial site" in these words: "This gas chamber, camouflaged as a shower room, was not used."

The Propaganda Intensifies

More than 50 years after American troops entered Dachau, Buchenwald and other German camps, and trained American investigators established the facts as to what had gone on in them, the government in Washington, the entertainment media in Hollywood, and the print media in New York continue to churn out millions of words and images annually on the horrors of the camps and the infamy of the Holocaust. Despite the fact that, with the exception of the defeated Confederacy, no enemy of America has ever so suffered so complete and devastating defeat as did Germany in 1945, the mass media and the politicians and bureaucrats behave as if Hitler, his troops, and his concentration camps continue to exist in an eternal present, and our opinion makers continue to distort, through ignorance or malice, the facts about the camps.

Time for the Truth

It is time that the government and the professional historians reveal the facts about Dachau, Buchenwald and the other camps. It is time they let the American public know how the inmates died, and how they didn't die. It is time that the claims of mass murder by gassing are clarified and investigated in the same manner as any other claims of murder. It is time that the free ride certain groups have enjoyed as the result of unchallenged Holocaust claims be terminated, just as it is time to end the scapegoating of other groups, including Germans, eastern Europeans, the Roman Catholic hierarchy, and the wartime leadership of America and Britain, either for their alleged role in the Holocaust or their supposed failure to stop it.

Above all, it is time that the citizens of this great Republic have the facts about the camps, facts they have a right to know, a right that is fundamental to the exercise of their authority and their will in the governance of their country. As citizens and as taxpayers, Americans of all ethnic backgrounds, of all faiths, have a basic right and an overriding interest in determining the facts of incidents that are deemed by those in positions of power to be significant in determining America's foreign and educational policy, as well as its selection of past events to be memorialized in our civic life.

Today the alleged facts of the Holocaust are at issue all over the civilized world. The truth will be decided only by recourse to the facts, in the public forum: not by concealing the facts, denying the truth, stonewalling reality. The truth will out, and it is time the government of this country, and governments and international bodies throughout the world, make public the evidence of what actually transpired in the German concentration camps in the years 1933-1945, so that we may put paid to the lies, without fear or favor, and carry out the work of reconciliation and renewal that is and must be the granite foundation of mutual tolerance between peoples and of a peace based on justice.

Summary
The conclusions of the early US Army investigations as to the truth about the wartime German concentration camps have since been corroborated by all subsequent investigators and can be summarized:

1.The harrowing scenes of dead and dying inmates were not the result of a German policy of "extermination," but rather the result of epidemics of typhus and other disease brought about largely by the effects of Allied aerial attacks.
2.Stories of Nazi supercriminals and sadists who turned Jews and others into handbags and lampshades for their private profit or amusement were sick lies or diseased fantasies; indeed, the German authorities punished corruption and cruelty on the part of camp commanders and guards.
3.On the other hand, portrayals of the newly liberated inmates as saints and martyrs of Hitlerism were quite often very far from the truth; indeed, most of the brutalities inflicted on camp detainees were the work of their fellow prisoners, in contravention of German policy and German orders.
4.The alleged homicidal showers and gas chambers were used either for bathing camp inmates or delousing their clothes; the claim that they were used to murder Jews or other human beings is a contemptible fabrication. Orthodox historians and professional "Nazi-hunters" have quietly dropped claims that inmates were gassed at Dachau, Buchenwald and other camps in Germany. They continue, however, to keep silent regarding the lies about Dachau and Buchenwald, as well as to evade an open discussion of the evidence for homicidal gassing at Auschwitz and the other camps captured by the Soviets.

The Holocaust Cowing and Milking of Nations By Alex Linder

'Holocaust': The Means by Which the Richest Group in the World Contrives to Cow and Milk the Rest of the Us in the Guise of Victims who are Persecuted and Due Eternal Restitution.

Reading through a thousand blog reactions to Duke v Blitzer on CNN, a generalization crystallizes. People confuse being told something six million times with knowing something. They are not the same. "It ain't what you don't know, it's what you know that just ain't so." The average man 'knows' the Holocaust exists because:

1) everybody uses the term;
2) he has seen photos of stacked bodies;
3) he has read Anne Frank's book;

4) authorities agree that questioning any of this is 'hate.'

In other words, the average man believes in the Holocaust for no logical reason, but out of simple mammalian conformity.
'Holocaust' is a loaded, dishonest term. You can't debate with undefined terms without making a joke of yourself, but the average man does not realize this. It is the part of public school, reinforced by mass media, to disable his thinking so that he's worse positioned to defend himself because he can't understand how he is manipulated to accept the illogical. Debate in the mass media of a democracy is nothing but the shuffling of loaded terms.

'Holocaust' is no ordinary noun. Rather, it is a loaded gun leveled at the head of the West and the rest. Give them their money and their pride of place or get your head and reputation blown off. You will notice that never, ever does debate in the captive media condescend to deconstruct the Zionist Privilege embodied in and sanctified by the designer label 'Holocaust.' Worship the Zionists and submit to their demands - that is what the term Holocaust means.

A demand for special privilege protected by a shell of pseudo-history; that is an objective description of the term. The heart of the 'Holocaust,' taking at face value the term's pretension to historical designation, is the claim that six million Jews were murdered by Nazi Germany, most of them by gassing. The evidence for the gassing is never discussed. Photos of crematories and bodies stacked like cord wood are shown. No context or explanation of the reason for showing them is given. The connection is to be assumed. But never is any ordinary evidence, let alone proof, of the gassing allegation advanced. That Jews were gassed is treated as though it were already proved and therefore unquestionable, save by the depraved. Thus, the practical job of the media and the well intentioned everyman is to smear and ostracize anybody who argues against settled truth. We all know that Jews were gassed, and that those who say otherwise are deniers driven by hate. But it ain't so just because "everybody knows" it is.

We are told repeatedly that the 'Holocaust' is both the worst thing that ever happened and the best documented thing in human history. We are to take these assertions on authority, since no genuine debate is allowed.

There are men who can prove the 'Holocaust' is a Big Lie. You can find them in jail. Their imprisonment is scarcely mentioned in the mass media. Their imprisonment goes unlamented by the mass columnists. To discuss these men and their work would endanger the Propa-sphere the media construct. They must disappear. But we know, mass media. And we're not going away. We're getting louder and stronger. And there's nothing you can do to stop us.

When Hitler came to power, Germany was hopelessly broke. The Treaty of Versailles had imposed crushing reparations on the German people, demanding that Germans repay every nation's cost of the (First World) war. These costs totaled three times the value of all the property in Germany.

Jewish currency speculators caused the German mark to plummet, precipitating one of the worst runaway inflations in modern times. A wheelbarrow full of 100 billion-mark banknotes could not buy a loaf of bread. The national treasury was empty. Countless homes and farms were lost to Jewish speculators and private banks. Germans lived in hovels. They were starving.

Nothing like this had ever happened before - the total destruction of the national currency, plus the wiping out of people's savings and businesses. On top of all this came a global depression. Germany had no choice but to succumb to debt slavery under international Jewish bankers until 1933, when the National Socialists came to power. At that point, the German government thwarted the international Jewish banking cartels by issuing its own money. World Jewry responded by declaring a global economic boycott of Germany.

Hitler began a national credit program by devising a plan of public works that included flood control, repair of public buildings and private residences, and construction of new roads, bridges, canals, and port facilities. All these were paid for with money that no longer came from the private international Jewish bankers.

The projected cost of these various programs was fixed at one billion units of the national currency. To pay for this, the German government issued bills of exchange, called Labor Treasury Certificates. In this way, the National Socialists put people to work.

Under the National Socialists, Germany's money wasn't backed by gold. It was essentially a receipt for labor and materials delivered to the government. Hitler said, "For every mark issued, we require the equivalent of a mark's worth of work done, or goods produced." Workers spent those Certificates on on other people's goods and services, thus creating more jobs for more people. In this way, the German people climbed out of the crushing debt imposed on them by the Jew bankers.

Within two years, the unemployment problem had been solved, and Germany was back on it's feet. It had a solid, stable currency with no debt, and no inflation, at a time when millions of people in the US and other Western countries were still out of work. Within five years, Germany went from being the poorest nation in Europe to the richest!

Germany even managed to restore foreign trade, despite the global boycott by Jew-owned enterprises, and the denial of foreign credit by Jew-owned banks. Germany succeeded in this by exchanging equipment and commodities directly with other countries, using a barter system that cut the Jew bankers out of the picture. Germany flourished, since barter eliminates national debt and trade deficits.

Germany's economic freedom was short-lived; but it left several monuments, including the famous Autobahn, the world's first extensive superhighway. This economic freedom made Hitler extremely popular with the German people. Germany was rescued from English economic theory, which says that all currency must be borrowed against the gold owned by a private and secretive banking cartel - such as the Federal Reserve, or the European Central Bank - rather than issued by the government for the benefit of the people.

In "Billions For The Bankers, Debts For The People" (1984), Shelton Emry commented:

"Germany issued debt-free and interest-free money from 1935 on, which accounts for Germany's startling rise from the depression to a world power in five years. The German government financed its entire operations from 1935 to 1945 without gold, and without debt. It took the entire Capitalist and Communist worlds to destroy the German revolution, and bring Europe back under the heel of the Jewish bankers."

> Yeah. Because 6 MILLION of 'em were MURDERED!

Here is part of the Leuchter Report:
"Thirty-one samples were selectively removed from the alleged gas chambers at Kremas I, II, III, IV and V. A control sample was taken from delousing facility #1 at Birkenau. The control sample was removed from a delousing chamber in a location where cyanide was known to have been used and was apparently present as blue staining. Chemical testing of the control sample #32 showed a cyanide content of 1050 mg/kg, a very heavy concentration. The conditions at areas from which these samples were taken are identical with those of the control sample, cold, dark, and wet. Only Kremas IV and V differed, in the respect that these locations had sunlight (the buildings have been torn down) and sunlight may hasten the destruction of uncomplexed cyanide. The cyanide combines with the iron in the mortar and brick and becomes ferric-ferro-cyanide or prussian blue pigmentation, a very stable iron-cyanide complex.

"The locations from which the analyzed samples were removed are set out in Table III.
"It is notable that almost all the samples were negative and that the few that were positive were very close to the detection level (1mg/kg); 6.7 mg/kg at Krema III; 7.9 mg/kg at Krerma I. The absense of any consequential readings at any of the tested locations as compared to the control sample reading 1050 mg/kg supports the evidence that these facilities were not execution gas chambers. The small quantities detected would indicate that at some point these buildings were deloused with Zyklon B - as were all the buildings at all these facilities"

"Having read most of the posts under the recent heading ' Are they talking torture' I am amazed at the apparent naivety of most of those posting.- Israel has been using all kinds of torturing methods for decades, knowingly backed by the USA.
Within the last year there was an excellent program on Channel 4 England which looked in to the methods used in one infamous camp called Khiam -- a snip below

(Palestinians arrested and 'interrogated' have been and are tortured in one form or another. Although a place of such ghastly atrocities that the Israeli government tried to deny it for many years, the Khiam Detention and Interrogation Centre it maintained in Lebanon from 1985-1999 during its occupation there is one of the most well known (3, 4).) Unsnip.

The channel four programme was not easy to watch - from the many methods described graphically, was that of the wives and children being tortured to make the prisoner confess, the TV team were at the now closed camp - very atmospheric.

One search with Google, showing tens of thousands of different sites will prove to him and anyone else that those in power must know.

A bit from one site =
Israel Shahak, head of the Israeli League for Human Rights, says:
"Slapping the face, beating the head against the wall, and beating all parts of the body are common methods."
Victims are usually beaten by stick, boots, and gun butt all over the body - on the head, limbs, stomach, genitals, accompanied by threats of detaining or raping family members, or making them lose their jobs.

But for Rhateb several other methods were used - he was wired up to electrodes and bolts of high voltage current coursed agonizingly through his body. Later, he was hanged from the ceiling by one arm for hours. After a few days, a man brought a water jug and told Rhateb that he could drink as much as he wanted. However, acid was diluted in the water and this caused him intense pain and severe burns.

The deprivation of basic necessities should also be considered as a part of this torture; food and medical care are not provided and sleeping is forbidden. Due to such methods, more than 500 Palestinian prisoners have died. More lucky ones suffer diseases while others are maimed and physically disabled.

Last week, Amnesty International's annual report revealed that Israeli forces arrested 1,200 Palestinians in 1997 for "security reasons." Meanwhile, Israel also issued more than 1,900 administrative detention orders and detained 354 Palestinians at the end of year.

Bear in mind, many of these people are not guilty of any crimes. But just living on the wrong side in Palestine.

When doing a search just use the words ' Israel and torture', any way round, you can also use 'camps'
John.

But isn't israel a "democracy"?"

Here is a quote from The Nameless War, by Captain A. H. M. Ramsay:

"The urgent alarm sounded in 1918 by Mr. Oudendyke in his letter to Mr. Balfour (see page 25), denouncing bolshevism as a Jewish plan, which if not checked by the combined action of the European powers, would engulf Europe and the world, was no exaggeration. By the end of that year the red flag was being hoisted in most of the great cities of Europe. In Hungary the Jew Bela Kuhn organized and maintained for some time a merciless and bloody tyranny similar to the one in Russia. In Germany the Jews, Liebknecht, Barth, Scheidemann, Rosa Luxemburg, etc., made a desperate bid for power. These and other similar convulsions shook Europe; but each country in its own way just frustated the onslaughts.

In most countries concerned a few voices were raised in the endeavour to expose the true nature of these evils. Only in one, however, did a political leader and group arise, who grasped to the full the significance of these happenings, and perceived behind the mobs of native hooligans the organisation and driving power of world Jewry. This leader was Adolf Hitler, and his group the National Socialist Party of Germany.

Never before in history had any country not only repulsed organized revolution, but discerned Jewry behind it, and faced up to that fact. We need not wonder that the sewers of Jewish vituperation were flooded over these men and their leader; nor should we make the mistake of supposing that Jewry would stick at any lie to deter honest men everywhere from making a thorough investigation of the facts for themselves. Nevertheless, if any value liberty, and set out to seek truth and defend it, this duty of personal investigation is one which they cannot shirk.

To accept unquestioningly the lies and misrepresentaions of a Jew-controlled or influenced press, is to spurn truth by sheer idleness, if for no worse reason."

Well, the high band in the Multimax (which I modified for HF to be about 2000 Hz to 5500 Hz) would heavily compress if I hit a strong sibilant, as I tend to do sometimes. And it would release so slowly that for a second or two all the presence would be gone from the audio. Clearly too slow for my application.

So I sped up the release time of the high band to about a third of stock. It sounded much better and was still a slower release than a typical multiband processor.

I liked the Multimax. Smooth, super-clean, and "larger than life" at the same time.

Thank you. The Aphex processors are very nice; a friend of mine used them at an FM in Arlington and they did very well indeed.

I've been thinking about building my own 4-band optical compressor for HF transmit purposes. Even bought a few Vactrols for control elements. I like the idea of the gain reduction being simply the result of a light-coupled variable resistive attenuator -- very clean. I'd use Linkwitz-Riley crossover filters to separate the bands, as they have no summing peaks, unlike most bandsplitters. Might be fun.

With my best,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

I worked one at a radio station some years ago. Nice. But, then, to control sibilants, we ran a de-esser. Orban, actually. That allowed for that larger than life sound, without being so fast that it created conflicts with the brickwall limiter.

The optical compressor is used in Urei LA-4's. Very nice RMS gain reduction, which eliminated pumping. But not as tightly controlled by a peak-riding control loop. And not free of artifacts. But, that can be controlled by applying a light touch. And a de-esser after.

Our engineer built his own multiband, as you suggest, by splitting the audio into three bands, and controlling each with an LA-4. Sounded REALLY big.

Use a gentle slope at the crossover points to minimize phase errors, and to prevent holes at the crossover which can be substantially audible at gain reductions exceeding 10db. Minor errors will be more or less inaudible if no further spectal separation follows your multiband. A gentler crossover allows a more natural sound by eliminating the hard crossover which causes sharp difference in the way each band of spectra are processed.

But, over all, your thinking is sound.

the republicans only economic plan is to continue the tax breaks to the rich and allow corporations to continue moving jobs overseas. for some reason, republicans have convinced their stupid constituents that doing the same thing as before will somehow create a different outcome. it's unreal how these people are so willing to give not only their tax money to the rich, but also give up control of their lives to privatized SS and Medicare/caid

Expelled
The Fourth Lateran Council restricted Jewish commercial advantage but it did not end the Jewish problem. Beginning in the latter part of the 13th century, one European country after another expelled its Jewish population as the only final solution to the problem. First to take the step was England which banned them in 1290. Fifteen years later in 1306 the French followed suit. In steady succession the various states of Europe emulated this example with Spain being one of the last to enforce the ban in 1492. The situation in Spain is worth noting. Says Encyclopedia Britannica: [page 57, vol. 13 - 1947]: "... The 14th century was the golden age of their history in Spain. In 1391 the preaching of a priest of Seville, Fernando Martinez, led to the first general massacre of the Jews who were envied for their prosperity and hated because they were the king's tax collectors." Ferdinand and Isabella, after uniting Spain and driving out the Moors turned their attention to the Jewish problem, with the result that they were evicted completely in 1492. In 1498 Portugal evicted its Jewish population also.

The Exploiters
A great deal has been said about the "persecution" of the Jews in Europe and elsewhere, and they have pretty well convinced the world (or at least Americans) that these hardships were inflicted on an innocent people. But these rich Spanish Jews we see being evicted in 1492 were not down-trodden folk. They were the wealthy, the privileged, the exploiters: they were the well-fed merchants and the gouging tax collectors ...

So it was in Portugal; in that country we find that the deportation of the Jews ... "deprived Portugal of its middle class and its most scientific traders and financiers." [Encyclopedia Britannica, page 279, vol. 18 - 1947.] Undeniably this class of traders and financiers was put to hardship by this banishment, but it does not follow that they were victims of discrimination in the accepted sense, nor were they underprivileged in any way. Rather we see a wealthy merchant group being ousted from its seat of vested privilege by a thoroughly outraged, and a thoroughly exploited Christian society ...

The situation in England was similar. The Jews had come to England in the wake of the Norman conquest and had quickly gained a position of wealth and prosperity. Says Valentine's Jewish Encyclopedia of this period: "Their numbers and prosperity increased, Aaron of Lincoln being the wealthiest man in England in his time ... his financial transactions covering the whole country and concerning many of the leading nobles and churchmen ... On his death his property passed to the crown and a special branch of the exchequer had to be created to deal with it."

England
England, ironically enough, was the last country to be invaded by the Jews and the first to evict them. After the Fourth Lateran Council the Jews had become increasingly difficult to deal with and there were a number of anti-Jewish riots. Perplexed by the problem posed by this alien minority which seemed well on its way to corralling the kingdom's wealth, and failing in an attempt to force its assimilation. Edward I confiscated all Jewish wealth and evicted them permanently in 1290. Not until 1655 was a Jew legally permitted to re-enter England. Britain thus established the precedent for the later eviction which soon followed on the continent.

France
In France too the Jews were dominant in trade and finance and had been since before Charlemagne's time. Under Philip the Fair (1285-1314) one of the last, and certainly one of the greatest of the Capetian line, France had become the greatest power in Europe. It was Philip's need for money which led him to seize Jewish wealth and drive them from the country. He had already before 1306 taken desperate measures to raise money, which was in short supply, by forbidding the export of gold and silver from France. The same need for money brought him into conflict with the Templars, whose wealth he also seized. But it was the Jews who controlled the greatest supply of floating wealth. In 1306 Philip solved his financial problem-and France's Jewish problem-by expropriating their wealth and evicting them. Thus ended the centuries-long commercial dominance of the Jew in France. Later a few were permitted to return and these were in turn ejected in 1394.

RETURN TO THE EAST
The Evictions
Space does not permit a detailed discussion of the other evictions which followed and which resulted in the banishment of the Jews from virtually every country in Western Europe in the succeeding centuries but here in chronological order is a list of the evictions:

ENGLAND: Jews expelled in 1290 by Edward I. Not permitted to re-enter till 1655.

FRANCE: Expelled in 1306 by Philip the Fair. A few were permitted to return but were again evicted in 1394. Jewish settlements remained in Bordeaux, Avignon, Marseilles, (from where they were evicted in 1682) and in the northern province of Alsace.

SAXONY: Expelled in 1349.

HUNGARY: By 1092 the Jews were in control of Hungary's tax collections. In 1360 they were expelled but later returned. In 1582 they were again expelled from the Christian part of Hungary.

BELGIUM: Expelled in 1370. A few settled there again in 1450, but no large numbers came till 1700.

SLOVAKIA: Ousted from Prague in 1380. Many settled there again after 1562. In 1744 Marie Theresa expelled them again.

AUSTRIA: Expelled in 1420 by Albrecht V.

NETHERLANDS: Expelled from Utrecht in 1444.

SPAIN: Expelled in 1492.

LITHUANIA: Expelled in 1495 by Grand Duke Alexander. They later returned.

PORTUGAL: Expelled in 1498.

PRUSSIA: Expelled in 1510.

ITALY: Expelled from Kingdom of Naples and Sardinia in 1540.

BAVARIA: Banned permanently in 1551.

Jews were not permitted to enter Sweden until 1782. None were permitted to enter Denmark before the 17th century and they were not allowed in Norway after 1814. Today only a handful reside in all Scandinavia.

Back to Poland
By 1500 all of Western Europe except northern Italy, parts of Germany, and the Papal possessions around Avignon, had been rid of the Jewish invasion. For a while, at least, Europe was free of the Jews; not until 1650 did they return in any numbers. Says Encyclopedia Britannica: [page 57-58, vol. 13 - 1947.] "The great mass of the Jewish people were thus to be found once more in the East, in the Polish and Turkish empires . . The few communities suffered to remain in western Europe were meanwhile subjected at last to all the restrictions which earlier ages had usually allowed to remain as an ideal; so that in a sense, the Jewish dark ages may be said to begin with the Renaissance."

THE RENAISSANCE
As the Jew Departed ...
The period marked by the evictions-1300 to 1650-also marks the period of the Renaissance which broke over Europe as the Jews departed.

Starting at first in the trading cities of northern Italy in about 1300, there began a great rebirth of culture and learning which at first was based almost entirely on the writings of the ancient Greeks and Romans. Very quickly this renascent culture spread over Europe and when the age had ended, in about 1650, Europe was by comparison with her former status, enlightened and civilized. Quite obviously all this could not have taken place had it not been for a great upsurge of commercial activity which occurred simultaneously with, and as an adjunct of, the Renaissance. Not until the nations of Europe had wrested commercial control from the ghetto did this rebirth of western civilization occur.

Here is a quote from Mein Kampf:

"The fight which Fascist Italy waged against Jewry's three principal weapons, the profound reasons for which may not have been consciously understood (though I do not believe this myself) furnishes the best proof that the poison fangs of that Power which transcends all State boundaries are being drawn, even though in an indirect way.
The prohibition of Freemasonry and secret societies, the suppression of the supranational Press and the definite abolition of Marxism, together with the steadily increasing consolidation of the Fascist concept of the State--all this will enable the Italian Government, in the course of some years, to advance more and more the interests of the Italian people without paying any attention to the hissing of the Jewish world-hydra.
"The English situation is not so favorable. In that country which has 'the freest democracy' the Jew dictates his will, almost unrestrained but indirectly, through his influence on public opinion."

Wonder if Stevie will be auctioning off that Tourist Policemens outfit complete with truncheon.

Maybe the trolls could donate the proceeds to charity. Sure to be worth a few bob in years to come.

- Anyone transmitting at a time such as that would be running very limited
- power, likely no more than a couple hundred watts (the max power output of a
- common ham mobile rig that can be run from 12V battery power),

- since it would be likely that no
- commercial power would be available.

BAD yes very likely . . .

I such times with nothing on the Air-Waves

a few Watts could go a long way . . .

A One to Ten Watt Community Radio Station getting it's Electrical Power from a Waterwheel Driven [Stream Power] based Electrical Generator in an all-year-long flowing Creek may be the Voice of 'Community Hope' in a Dark World of Despair.

(OT) : After 'The Great Collapse' ?

What Will You Listen To . . . On the Radio ?

Will good old AM & FM Radio Stations :
Still Be On-the-Air ?

Better get me one of these Solar Panels to Charge my 12V 7AH Battery for the Grundig Satellit 800-M Radio : 12 Volts 750 mA Solar Panel http://www.global-merchants.com/home/tgm750.htm

The there is the "AA" Batteries in the other Radios.
Solar Powered Battery Charger AAA~D http://www.ccrane.com/more-categories/batteries-chargers/solar-powered-battery-charger.asp x

Maybe the CCRadio Plus Solar {Power} Kit can be 'adapted' to power the CCRadio-SW Radio http://www.ccrane.com/radios/am-fm-radios/ccradio-plus/ccradio-plus-solar-kit.aspx

CCRadio-SW Radio -aka- Redsun RP-2100
http://www.ccrane.com/radios/shortwave-radios/ccradio-sw.aspx

Etón 'Solar-Link' FR500 AM/FM Shortwave Radio 49m, 41m, 31m 25m looks like it could be useful.
http://www.etoncorp.com/product_card/?p_ProductDbId=517804 NOTE - Saw one of these today when I was down the grade at the Sonora, CA RadioShack Store to buy some Radio Parts

-also- Kaito KA500 Voyager AM/FM Shortwave Radio covers : SW1: 3.2~9 MHz & SW2: 9~22 MHz http://www.kaitousa.com/KA500.htm

Now for Powering a small Low-Power Community AM -or- FM Radio Station one of these would be a step in the right direction. "My Solar Back-Up" could easily be 'Your Back-Bone' for 6AM~10PM http://www.mysolarbackup.com/1800specs.html
Daily Broadcasting at 100 Watts and 10 Watts http://www.mysolarbackup.com/playvideo.html from 10PM~6AM.

. . . Yes when the 'Great Collapse' happens;
you just may hear . . .

3291. Toroid material for SWL baluns/ununs.

For ferrites commonly used in SWL baluns/ununs:
If you are using type 43 material in an RF transformer, performance will fall off shortly after 10 Mhz. If the core is wound as a true balun/TLT (Transmission Line Transformer), I have used it up to 30 Mhz.

Type 61 material is much more suitable for RF transformer from .2 Mhz to 100 Mhz. If wound as a true balun/TLT, it can be pressed into even broader frequency service.

This page points out the above:
http://www.palomar-engineers.com/Ferrite_Cores/ferrite_cores.html

With iron:
Type 2, such as T106-2, when wound as an RF transformer is very satisfactory to a bit beyond 10 Mhz. Wound as a true balun, I have used it up to 30 Mhz. (it is really too lossy, for me, at 28 Mhz, 10m)

Type 6 material, such as T106-6, is good from 2-30 Mhz when used as RF transformer (actually, I find the bandwidth to be larger in practice.) If wound as a balun/unun/TLT, it is quite usable from MW to ~50 Mhz. When wound as the 16:1/9:1 as I pointed out earlier, I find this to be THE KILLER BALUN/UNUN (can be used interchangeably.)

http://www.palomar-engineers.com/Iron_Powder/iron_powder.html

JS

These are competitive, and better made. Plus they are specifically designed for communications by a radio hobby friendly business. No financial interest. I do have an SS-12 which never even gets warm.

Yeah, because people were being killed and raped in public and rescue choppers were fired on. Clearly you weren't dealing with civilized people here.

And yes, I've been through Andrew and went weeks without power after Wilma, and none of my neighbors behaved that way. Odd, isn't it.

Wonder what the "noise" is?

I'll stick with the Astrons. I've got three of them including a 25 amp http://groups.google.com/group/ba.broadcast/msg/28bf382f603c482b?hl=en

SMS - I'll know more shortly, after someone I know talks with Keefe, but I have a pretty good idea:

"Yesterday I phoned their toll-free number. The receptionist gave me the address not for John Keefe, but for his secretary. I spent several hours on that email before I sent it last night, and I got a bounceback saying delivery failed. But by that time (around 10:30) I had an email from Keefe saying he would call me today. So I immediately highlighted and copied his email address from his message to my Yahoo account, and pasted it into the "To" box on a forward of the Hotmail original. Within minutes, I had another bounceback. I then tried pasting the entire original into my Yahoo account and sending it from there. It bounced back to Yahoo, too. This morning I called their office again and spoke with the office manager. She gave me here office email address, and it bounced back from that, too. So I called back and asked her if she could set up a new free Hotmail account for the express purpose of receiving the message. She did, and sent me the address: I was able to receive your e-mail with the attachment at the hotmail account I set up. And, like you, was unable to forward it to our keefebartels.com address. I’ve reached out to our network consultant that set up our spam/AV software and I’m guessing our system thinks it is spam or because of all the links. I printed the e-mail and the attachment from the hotmail account and will give to John Keefe for his review."

Boy, you should have seen what this guy emailed Keefe - LMFAO!!! Keefe may hae been already aware because they have been visiting my blog since May (I didn't know who they were).

Here come the ambulance chasers:

"Radio stations/groups will be in an unenviable position. They stand to be sued by angry listeners, who no longer listen, and will have to sue the IBUZ company to recover what they've lost. That's on top of the money they wasted on the technology and the royalties. I doubt a single station, other than those leasing subchannels to the unaware, has made a penny on this kludge. Note how few stations are throwing good money after bad and increasing power. I believe that's only partially due to the economy. One day's pay of some CEOs would probably pay for it. Big box retailers will probably get off easy.

Very few of them even know what IBUZ iz. I'll bet the lawyers who used to chase ambulances will now follow BMWs. Mesothelioma will take a back seat the IBUZ disease. There are so many perceived deep pockets here that even the cheap lawyers will get into the act. It's not nice to cheat very wealthy people with $50,000 cars. At the very least, it's not very smart." Rich Wood

I am primarily interested in SW listening, not amateur, and really 16
- 160 meters. Would you recommend Type 61 for this application?

My only beef with compact flourescents is the buzzing noise they sometimes cause on the radio, plus they're rumored to contain toxic material in their base.

And how much you wanna bet that all the compact flourescents are, or soon will be, made overseas? More American jobs lost.

I''ve got an Astron on my desk, too. Looking for something with a smaller footprint for a listening room up at the cabin.

It's a switching mode power supply, so the noise is likely artifacts related to it's operation. Tenma claims "ultra RFI immune" which prompted the question.

If it's quiet, it would be perfect. Especially for the price.

Bruce,

The Amidon website has a chart of ferrite materials and their applicability to various project types. Most of your questions can be answered there. Including options should you like to build something specific to your needs, deviating from the intents of an original design.

Actually, it's Mercury. In the tube, not the base.

Most of the newer ones don't make as much noise as flourescents used to. You have to be pretty much on top of them to hear a bump in the noise level.

Even so, I put grounded metal screens around mine. Pretty easy to do with recessed lighting. The brass screen makes a subtle grille.
Less simple, but no more difficult, with free standing lamps.

The most noise from my CFL's comes from the switching transients in the electronics in the base. Safetly caps across each socket eliminated that.

If R75 is using the same front end and possibly very similar IF circuitry as R70,this it is a proof of an extremely succesful design! The R70 ,if my memory serves me right, was most likely based on a transceiver like IC-720A, made around 1981-82 . I might be wrong,though. Too bad very few manufacturers keep the evolutionary cycle going nowdays,even VW...

For a historical document,written in the 18th century, I always wonder: why is it that laws of an utmost importance way back must be followed to the letter ? Considering all the incredible advances in science and lifestyle (how many small independent farmers do we have left in this country?), instant communication,planes,trains,space stations and satellites, the list is much longer than it seems at first, how can we claim what was a matter of literally life and death 230 years ago must be invariably applied to in modern life ! I just hope that the Supreme Court justices are mostly normal and decent human beings and don't interpret the Law in a perverted and demented fashion... like it happens, quite often.

An incandescent lamp causes more mercury to enter the biosphere, due to increased use of fossil energy to power the less efficient bulb. Coal plants release more radioactive material than nukes, too, BTW.

Let's come back in 2030 and see if any of them last more than 20-25 years! There are some real champions in the incandescent world.
Several are over a 100 years old. And some of them have never been shut off ! Florescent lights are detrimental all-around. Most CFLs are poorly made and overpriced. LED bulbs may be the current winner by most standards,but the price is quite steep,last time I checked. Long live the incandescent light bulb !

Now that is True One CFL Bulb = 1
Original and Five Replacement Incandescent Bulbs = 6

Incandescent Bulbs* to One CFL Mercury Emissions over the Life of One CFL Bulb : 6-to-1

* The Mercury Emissions from Coal Powered Electric Power Plants for One Incandescent Bulb during it's short life; is about the same as the Mercury in One CFL for it's much longer life.

Cold Cathode CFLs [CCFLs] are 25-to-1 ~ RHF

Note - The new Cold-Cathode CFLs [CCFLs / C2FLs] are said to be near Mercury Free; and can actually last 25K Hours and save on Electricity too.

The incandescent bulb with which I am familiar - that champeen in Livermore, California - is something like an 8- or 12-watt carbon filament bulb. It just keeps on burning that low wattage forever.

I have never had an incandescent bulb last more than about 5 years in light service. Traditional Fluorescents are no betters. The CFLs I have used, however, have yet to fail...the oldest is 6 years and running, AND it uses a LOT less energy for same light output.

And I would also note - there is also far less Hg when the bulb is finally wasted than in the fossil fuel smoke the thing saved while it operated. A bulb with Hg in it is manageable Hg, something that can be dealt with - the heavy-metal-laden smoke that comes out of a coal plant, even heavily filtered, is essentially unmanageable.

With SWL, the type 43 would work better at 160m and the 61 better at 17.48ï¿½17.90 MHz and above. But, the type 43 would work well on MW, which I am assuming is of interest to you also. Antenna type, inductance/performance you find necessary in rejection of CM, size of the core, number of turns, etc. all factor in, also. Mainly, I am tossing this stuff our for "nit pickers" like me ...

You could get by with either material ... one will favor the top end, one the bottom ... but you can use either. Some might see the difference between performance of the two as "splitting hairs." I just go to extremes for fractions of s-unit, or db. LOL

I have always wound my own. Some of those probably work well, I just don't know. Winding all my baluns/ununs myself has given me a hands on exposure to a multitude of core materials, winding techniques, performance of the differing constructions, etc.

The core material I mentioned earlier, along with the winding technique for it gave the best performance, across the widest bandwidth, of any I have wound and used ... I am forever searching new techniques and materials. Just ordered some russian toroids which look promising ... when you span 30+ Mhz, performance on one end will not match the other ... so the question simply becomes, "What is the best compromise?"

I should have further mentioned, when you are having to insert 10db, 20db, 30db+ attenuators into the antenna line of a good antenna, to prevent overloading of the receiver, you know you have a good balun/unun!

No. What I am pointing out is simply, the antenna type, construction, efficiency, transmission line ... dictates all the signal you are going to get. The balun/unun can be a great assistance if you have a mismatch between the receiver and the antenna, as you need to deliver all the signal to the receiver and not be losing it in a mismatch, if you are to realize best possible performance.

Simply put, the balun/unun can never improve the signal the antenna can capture, or the signal the transmission line can deliver. But, it can remove the losses by lower/eliminating SWR (proper matching of antenna impedance and power transfer to the receiver) and noise picked up from the transmission line. It can only do this with the proper core material, number of winding turns, proper transmission line impedance of the windings, etc.

Usually, the commercial baluns I tear apart are constructed with one main factor in mind--COST! The wire is too small, the impedance the windings present, as a transmission line, are improper, the core is too small to allow the correction of these windings, etc.

You just can't get around the fact that manufactures are in business to make money--cheapest material, easiest to construct, lightest to ship, etc. At best, your interests of having the best possible balun can only come in second to these goals of the manufacturer.

Winding your own is just using common sense ...

JS

Let's come back in 2030 and see if any of them last more than 20-25 years! There are some real champions in the incandescent world.
Several are over a 100 years old. And some of them have never been shut off ! Florescent lights are detrimental all-around. Most CFLs are poorly made and overpriced. LED bulbs may be the current winner by most standards,but the price is quite steep,last time I checked. Long live the incandescent light bulb !

Those ancient incandescents have gotten to be ancient because they are being run WAAAAY below the light output considered standard today. To get to a decent light output, they would have to run at least 50% higher voltage, and would likely die quickly at that point. If you use 220V incandescents in your home, they will last virtually forever, but won't put out much light... same with those antique Edisons...

The one in Texas was in an Opera House in Ft.Worth. I believe it is in a museum now. Insofar as AC voltages are concerned- if I'm correct nearly all small early electrical devices were rated at 100V (whether AC or DC is unimportant,since the earliest electricity was DC,until Tesla proved otherwise and the first AC power stations appeared in upstate NY). If Livermore FD has only 85 volts supplying the champion bulb that may be necessary. By the way, the average Con Ed supplied voltage over here has been over 120 volts for years,closer to 125 and even higher in some places! Last few years even florescent lights seem to burn out much quicker than the so-called life cycle claimed and the incandescents pop almost immediately.Some of them last only a few weeks/months. Even the best brand-names. Entire China must been laughing non-stop all the way to the bank ...

I'm pretty sure Ben Franklin used electricity to communicate with his peers (lots of sparks). He also turned down the offer to become the first President. And he just might have been one of the main contributors in writing the Constitution. And if some people see the articles in different colors /shades, well ...that is by definition "freedom of speech" .Everyone is entitled to his /her own opinion. And that is Democracy at the most basic level.

- I'm pretty sure Ben Franklin used electricity to communicate with his
- peers (lots of sparks). He also turned down the offer to become the - first President. And he just might have been one of the main
- contributors in writing the Constitution.

Yes one of the 'contributors' in formulation of the Ideas and Ideals in what evolved into the Nexus-Document know as the US Constitution.

The US Constitution Convention the Nexus-Group : Producing the 'Gestalt' of American and Americanism.

- And if some people see the articles in - different colors /shades, well ...that is
- by definition "freedom of speech" .

No that is Freedom of Thought {Thinking}
-cause- It Ain't "Speech" Until You 'Say' It !

- Everyone is entitled to his/her own opinion.

Yes that is again Freedom of Thought {Thinking}
-and- Again When You Give "Voice" To Your 'Opinions' : That's Freedom of Speech !

- And that is Democracy at the most basic level.

Yes in 'Theory' Democracy is Every Person have and "Equal Vote" in the Running of a Society.
-and- The Right to Speak in the Public Forum before the Vote to Affect the Outcome of "The Vote".
A Real True Democracy would naturally evolve from Freedom of Thought {Form an Opinion} and Freedom of Speech {Express Your Opinion}

-however- In Practice often Democracies in time degenerate to the Rule of the Masses and {Tyranny of the Mob} directed by Populist Leaders {Elitists}.

What about my old Lava Lamp that I bought at a Goodwill store over twenty years ago? I almost never use it, but it requires a 40 Watt Incandescent light bulb for light and the heat from the Incandescent light bulb to make it work.
I reckon I ought to stock up on some G.E.40 Watt Incandescent Light Bulbs too.

See, it is all in the perception, where you lose it or not ...

Jesse Ventura knows more than your average bear because, he has been an American politician, former governor of Minnesota, retired professional wrestler and color commentator, Navy UDT veteran, actor, and former radio and television talk show host.

Now, stand him beside Joe Sixpack and you will see he might have one or two things to say which are interesting ...

Most likely because you are mentioning manufacturers which sell to commercial and amateur applications ... not where the average listener gets his/her baluns/ununs.

Use common sense man, that is what I am attempting to point out.
However, you post is an excellent example in the negative ...

That is just nonsensical in relation to what I posted ... you need a good tutorial on baluns/ununs/RF-transformers. In your particular case, a newbie/beginners guide would probably be best

And, you are even tossing in receiver overload from strong stations and inferring baluns can/will act as an attenuator, if needed ... strange.

And, your garden hose has absolutely nothing to do with all this. Especially if you are using an ancient receiver which has 300 ohm input ... baluns are best referred to in terms of ratios of impedances matched instead of trying to use 50 ohms as a universal law.

And, I know of no antenna which will present a flat impedance over the broad bandwidths we are discussing, so the other end of the ratio, 50 ohms, is an average rather than an established fact ...

That never happened. Total Fox News B.S.
"More important, there has been no official confirmation that a single military helicopter over New Orleans--let alone a National Guard Chinook in the pre-dawn hours of September 1--was fired upon. "I was at the Superdome for eight days, and I don't remember hearing anything about a helicopter getting shot at," says Maj. Ed Bush, public affairs officer for the Louisiana Air National Guard. With hundreds of Guard troops always on duty inside and outside the Superdome before, during, and after Hurricane Katrina, if there had been gunfire, "we would have heard it," Bush maintains. "The instant reaction over the radio would have been overwhelming."

The Air Force, to which the Air National Guard reports, also has zero record of helicopter sniping. "We investigated one incident and it turned out to have been shooting on the ground, not at the helicopter," Air Force Maj. Mike Young told The New York Times on September 29.

Aside from the local National Guard, the other government agency with scores of helicopters over New Orleans was the U.S. Coast Guard, which rescued more than 33,000 people. "Coast Guard helicopters," says spokeswoman Jolie Shifflet, "were not fired on during Hurricane Katrina rescue operations."

How about the Civil Air Patrol (CAP), the all-volunteer, Air Force assisting network of around 58,000 private Cessna pilots, 68 of whom flew a total of 833 aid missions after the hurricane? "To my knowledge," says CAP Public Affairs Manager Jim Tynan, "none of our pilots on any Katrina-related mission were taking ground fire."

That doesn't mean that people weren't shooting at helicopters. As Lt. Comdr. Tim Tobiasz, the Coast Guard's operations officer for New Orleans airspace, told me, "It's tough to hear in a helicopter. You have two turbine engines....I don't know if you could hear a gunshot below." And the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms arrested a 21-year-old man in the Algiers neighborhood of New Orleans on September 6 for firing a handgun out his window while helicopters flew nearby.

But the basic premise of the article that introduced the New Orleans helicopter sniper to a global audience was dead wrong, just like so many other widely disseminated Katrina nightmares. No 7-year-old rape victim with a slit throat was ever found, even though the atrocity was reported in scores of newspapers. The Convention Center freezer was not stacked with 30 or 40 dead bodies, nor was the Superdome a live-in morgue. (An estimated 10 people died inside the two buildings combined, and only one was slain, according to the best data from National Guard officials at press time.)

Tales of rapes, carjackings, and gang violence by Katrina refugees quickly circulated in such evacuee centers as Baton Rouge, Houston, and Leesville, Louisiana--and were almost as quickly debunked.

From a journalistic point of view, the root causes of the bogus reports were largely the same: The communication breakdown without and especially within New Orleans created an information vacuum in which wild oral rumor thrived. Reporters failed to exercise enough skepticism in passing along secondhand testimony from victims (who often just parroted what they picked up from the rumor mill), and they were far too eager to broadcast as fact apocalyptic statements from government officials--such as Mayor Ray Nagin's prediction of 10,000 Katrina-related deaths (there were less than 900 in New Orleans at press time) and Police Superintendent Edwin Compass' reference on The Oprah Winfrey Show to "little babies getting raped"--without factoring in discounts for incompetence and ulterior motives."

Are you just making stuff up? The transformer keeps the impedance at 50 Ohms or below so it'll drive a coaxial cable without breaking the hose rule. No changes to the overall level structure are necessary.

I just love people with minds which are asleep ...

I probably should not do this, but I will share the secrets of life which get you ahead.

Everything I do in life is a "conspiracy." I conspire to get my boss to pay me as much as possible. I conspire to get ahead of all other competition in life. I study the little nuances which make BIG differences. It started out with my first job in high school, at an old fashioned Shell Oil service station, in 1968. I was given a nickel commission on every quart of oil I sold, a dollar on every tire, a kick back from lube jobs, etc. Gas was .20 cents a gallon, during a price war, you could purchase it anywhere and never pay over .28 cents a gallon, a nickel put a meaningful amount of gas in your tank.

And, it only gets worse. I conspire to get the best life for the wife and me, my friends, my community ... I conspire to get the best prices I can, the best deals on a car, loans, mortgages, etc. Conspiracy is the first thing I think of when I get up, the last thing I think of when I go to sleep. I find conspiracy real and profitable ... remember that nickel? Conspiracy is worth more, much, much more!

To cut to the chase, I sold a lot of tires, a lot of batteries, a lot of lube jobs, a lot of oil, a lot of batteries ... on very good months, my commission was greater than my paycheck. And, as I got better at it, the rewards increased exponentially.

If you don't think multilevel corporations and government don't employ stealth, deception and conspiracy in most of their actions, you have a very lot to learn. I have even helped them in my employment history, as the more they "profited", the more I profited ... I believe it is their main mode of operation.

Tin foil hats? I'd sell a million of 'em! If there isn't a need for them now, I'll create one!

JS

Law Firm's HD Radio Probe Picking Up Steam?

Keefe Bartels, the law firm that's looking into whether consumers are unhappy with their new HD Radio car receivers, is hearing lots of stories. Whether legal action will result remains unclear.

We reported on the New Jersey firm's efforts last week. John Keefe, a managing partner, tells me the firm is still in the information-gathering stage and has not filed a lawsuit on behalf of unhappy consumers — though what it finds could potentially lead to that from the personal injury firm.

Keefe became interested in the technology when he bought a new BMW a couple of years ago. He says the dealer told him HD Radio wouldn't work but that it was built into the cost of the car, because the receiver was part of a package. He says the dealer threw in a set of floor mats to compensate.

Keefe told me he heard the AM signal blending between digital and analog and back again in a demo. He called it "bumping," which sounded like upcutting speech, as that happened.

The firm is soliciting comments from unhappy consumers regarding HD Radio on its website. Keefe says it is receiving complaints from "all kinds of people" and wants to determine how individuals have been affected. He didn't say how many exactly or go into details.

Keefe, who describes himself as a consumer advocate lawyer, says he wants to understand if potentially faulty car HD Radio receivers have cost consumers money — from paying more for the car because of the package and then either not being able to receive a reliable digital signal or because there are not a lot of digital signals in their area.

When I contacted iBiquity for my first story on this, they had no comment.

It sounds like most of the complaints he's getting are from AM listeners. He's also getting an earful from radio industry people, so this should be interesting. I'll keep you up to date.

So do you have a dopey web page discrediting the victims of murders, looting and theft during Katrina? I noticed that went without comment.

And how about this:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xN2DmtIm6Qo

If it hadn't been caught on tape and broadcast by MSNBC, you wouldn't believe this, either. The fact that the helicopter shooting was reported, and considered possible by your own source:

That doesn't mean that people weren't shooting at helicopters. As Lt.
Comdr. Tim Tobiasz, the Coast Guard's operations officer for New Orleans
airspace, told me, "It's tough to hear in a helicopter. You have two turbine engines....I don't know if you could hear a gunshot below."
And the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms arrested a 21-year-old man

in the Algiers neighborhood of New Orleans on September 6 for firing a handgun out his window while helicopters flew nearby.

Should lead you to be a little less closed minded about the possibility. And I repeat, you weren't dealing with civilized people here.

50 Ohms is the characteristic impedance of RG58/U, the defacto standard SWL cable. 50 Ohms is also the nominal impedance of the unbalanced external RF input on virtually every receiver so equipped.

The hose rule says you can't feed water from a fat hose (Hi-Z) into a hose of lesser diameter (Low Z) without spilling some. If you go the other way, no spillage.

The point of the MLB is to keep the highest impedance from the antenna at or below 50 Ohms.

According to my contact over on http://keeppublicradiopublic.com/, Keefe Bartels has spent about 25 hours on the site, and I have also gotten a number of hits from them, too. Also, I am getting hits from many foreign countries, including Brazil where they are considering DRM and HD Radio. Struble can lie and hide, but now, there is no where to run. I bet his investors start pulling out, for fear of being dragged into court over a class-action suit. Radio World is obviously down-playing the negative affects of FM-HD, as many FM stations are receiving severe interference, too. I can see this escalating all the way to the FCC. I do know that broadcasters are getting involvded, too. Perhaps, the Courts and the DOJ will get a whiff of this investigation, and file criminal charges against all those connected with HD Radio for fraud. This has been a long time coming, and wil not go away, just like HD chearleaders claimed about HD Radio. Maybe, all of the unhappy analog listeners should jump on the clas-action aganst iBiquity for breaking all of their analog radios, especially the AM-sections.

I would like to see radio go digital. In that, compression algorithms covert audio into bit steams, which a digital radio receives on a RF carrier and decodes to audio fed to the speaker.

I would like to see something open source used, in the encoding algorithms, like the Ogg Vorbis protocol, so anyone can create software to encode/decode the streams without infringing on someones patent rights, and so it is open source.

Cheap converters should be able to be produced which decode the audio bit streams and produce a voice modulated signal to feed to old analog radios ... but then, people in hell want ice water ...

I have a certain fondness for analog signals the fact very simple simple circuits can be used to construct a radio ... but, it is time.

I have an AC line voltage meter (digital LED) plugged into an outlet. Several times over the last few years the voltage exceeded the allowable maximum of 126 volts, sometimes reaching 130. I always reported this to the electric company and the problem always turned out to be with a regulator at a substation. The scary part is that had I not reported it, there's no telling how long the problem might have gone unnoticed. Voltage here usually ranges between 122 and 124 depending on time of day and overall load (lower during the day, higher at night). It's almost always above 120. The engineers at the electric company told me that their equipment is designed to keep the voltage between 114 and 126 volts (120 volts plus or minus 5%), and anything outside that range is abnormal.

Have any of you guys experienced abnormal voltage issues? What is your average voltage range? Just how robust are modern electronic appliances when faced with _modest_ abnormal voltages.

I can't speak for US appliances. Since the EU "normalized" their line voltage to 230 volts, appliances destined for sale in the EU have to work with line voltages of 220 volts (Continental Europe) up to 240 volts (UK).

In plain English the EU by law made everything 230 volts, but range is wide enough so that anything between 220-240 volts (and some "give" on each end) is acceptable and the devices must accomodate them.

Some things are sold on a more reality based plan, they list the wattage at 220 and 240 such as some 5-7 watt bulbs I bought.

Here in Israel, the line voltage has been 230 volts for a long time so that people bringing 220 volt equipment from the EU or 240 volt equipment from the UK could just change their plugs and go.

As far as I know, Australia uses 240 volt household current and actually says it. :-)

The Solar Array Inverted requires that the AC Line Voltage is below 126 VAC otherwise it will not feed back into the Grid. The Solar people put a Meter on the AC Drop for a few days and ours was 130+ most of the time. PG&E had to come out and replace the Pole-Transformer with a different one; and adjust/reset something at the substation. Now we are feeding Power into the Grid at least on Sunny Days :o)

We have one room where I have replace the AC Line Clocks three times; because they all ran fast by up to 5 Minutes a day. Had to go with a Battery Clock.
No problem with any other AC Clocks in any of the other rooms; and those clocks worked a-ok in other locations; both before and after being in 'the room'.

Alternating Voltage in Foreign Countries

I have an (old, very old) AC line voltage meter too, the kind that sits on a shelf or bench or whatever and it plugs into a wall outlet.I haven't used it in a few years, but when I did use it, it was showing a steady 120 Volts Alternating line current.That needle was rock steady on 120 Volts AC.

Actually, an old buddy of mine and another guy was throwing away a bunch of old thingys at a scrap iron yard about thirty years ago.The AC Volt (the one that I have) meter was one of at least two they were throwing away.

Back in the 1970's, I traded him a 1931 Ford car I used to own (I bought that 1931 Ford car for $700.00 from an old guy in Sublette,Kansas back in the 1970's) for his 1939 Ford car.Later on, he told me the brakes on the 1931 Ford car failed and he said he went to dodging!

And if you're using the Amidon charts, use the line giving useful frequencies for "broadband transformers". Most of the Amidon frequency spec. is for tuned circuits, but for broadband use, you're using the core at frequencies much higher than what the same material is used for in tuned use.

The first longwire balun I built, inspired by the product review in a WRTH used, I think, 45 material or something around there. (Not in the mood to dig out that bag of stuff). It only worked above 15 Mhz, so was fine for CB listening, but who wants to do that. The transformers I've done since use the John Bryant recommended type 77, type 75, or type J. They're good for the range I listen to, 5-17 Mhz and probably reasonable below that.

Type 77 is speced for tuned use around .1-1 Mhz (as I remember), but for using it in broadband use, you're trading off some core loss with much smaller coil windings and the benefits that gives.

Not the same thing as transmitting, where you can accept a more limited frequency range and don't want your core to melt, or expode, or get saturated and go nonlinear at that power level.

Years ago, I sent a hand held electric blender thingy to that married Irish woman wayyyyyyyy over yonder across the big pond.I already knew they have different AC voltage and plugs over there, so I also sent her an adapter thingy with different plugs.And a bag of Cornmeal so she could make some Cornbread.Her Cornbread turned out to be a disaster.They just don't know how to cook in Limeyland.T'IS True!

That's the point. When propagation's good I can work the East Coast with 80 milliWatts. If I was using my old linear supply I'd still be drawing 6 Amps from the mains. With my switch mode supply, low power means low power. I'm going to put all my EFX pedals on a switcher,too.

I can hear a motor a mile away at the quarry. It is one of those 2 or 3 horsepower industrial monsters and it has brushes that arc. That's a quiet environment and the SS-12 did not raise the floor one bit. The antenna's 25 feet away, in all fairness.

Here are some quotes from "The Eleventh Hour" by John Tyndall

"For a short time, Britons from all regions of the country and its Empire, and from every social background, came together in a single cause, casting aside all previous political party and class divisions and joined hands in a common comradeship of the trenches.

And for the first time in centuries politicians in this country put aside party warfare and joined forces in working for a single goal. A coalition government was formed in 1916 and proceeded to coordinate the whole national life in one mighty endeavor. Laissez-faire Economics were dropped as Britain found that these methods, practiced so long in the years of peace had rendered her industry hopelessly incapable of producing her needs of survival in this titanic conflict. New industries, such as chemicals, machine tools and optics, had to be built practically from scratch, while others, such as electricity, aircraft and aero-engines, had to be greatly expanded, in order to provide the sinews of war; and this was done mainly on the initiative of the state. By the end of the war, tremendous strides had been made in making good these previous shortcomings of industry. What the theoretical stimulus of the "free market" had failed to do for decades beforehand was done in just three years of corporate effort, achieved by firm national leadership directing economic resources, and by the whole nation, and Empire, working as a team."

"Could not the super-human efforts displayed on the battlefield in the face of a dangerous adversity now be displayed again in the creation, from out of the rubble of newly born nations?"

"Sir Oswald Mosley... had crossed to the Labour benches after despairing of the Tories' ability or will to overcome the evils of poverty and unemployment in post 1918 Britain...

In time, however, Mosley came to recognize that in the ranks of Labour, however ideal the ends, there was a total incomprehension of, combined an unwillingness to accept, the necessary means... he said:

"This nation has to be mobilized and rallied for a tremendous effort, and who can do that except the government of the day?"

In the simplest terms, nationalism is no more than team spirit. Just as the school, the firm the regiment and the rugby team need, each in its own way to be infused with a pride of identity and a desire to win, so must nations, if they are to be effective forces for the furtherance of their own interests and for their survival in the world, be galvanized by the same vital forces."

Hitler wrote in Mein Kampf that the Jews tell big lies. The Jewish media took his words out of context and claimed that Hitler was in favor of big lies. This was in itself a big lie and proof that Hitler was right. Here is what Hitler wrote in Mein Kampf and in context:

"But it remained for the Jews, with their unqualified capacity for falsehood, and their fighting comrades, the Marxists, to impute responsibility for the downfall precisely to the man who alone had shown a superhuman will and energy in his effort to prevent the catastrophe which he had foreseen and to save the nation from that hour of complete overthrow and shame. By placing responsibility for the loss of the world war on the shoulders of Ludendorff they took away the weapon of moral right from the only adversary dangerous enough to be likely to succeed in bringing the betrayers of the Fatherland to justice. All this was inspired by the principle--which is quite true in itself--that in the big lie there is always a certain force of credibility; because the broad masses of a nation are always more easily corrupted in the deeper strata of their emotional nature than consciously or voluntarily, and thus in the primitive simplicity of their minds they are more readily fall victims to the big lie than the small lie, since they themselves often tell small lies in little matters but would be ashamed to resort to large-scale falsehoods. It would never come into their heads to fabricate colossal untruths, and they would not believe that others could have the impudence to distort truth so infamously. Even though the facts which prove this to be so may be brought clearly to their minds, they still doubt and waver and will continue to think that there may be some other explanation. For the grossly impudent lie always leaves traces behind it, even after it has been nailed down, a fact which is known to all expert liars in this world and to all who conspire together in the art of lying. These people know only too well how to use falsehood for the basest purposes.
"From time immemorial, however, the Jews have known better than any others how falsehood and calumny can be exploited. Is not their very existence founded on one great lie, namely, that they are a religious community, whereas in reality they are a race? And what a race! One of the greatest thinkers that mankind has produced has branded the Jews for all time with a statement which is profoundly and exactly true. He (Schopenhauer) called the Jew 'The Great Master of Lies'. Those who do not realize the truth of that statement, or do not wish to believe it, will never be able to lend a hand in helping Truth to prevail."

If one reads the legend at the bottom, one will see that the higher the score (out of 10), the less corrupt a nation is. The top of the chart is less corrupt, the bottom (Chad) the worst. The U.S. actually scores pretty well, all things considered.

I would also very much like to understand how the scoring, by business leaders and another poorly defined group, is actually accomplished.
In other words, no matter what the scores say, take this with a VERY BIG grain of salt until you better understand the methodology.

Nope - 10 is best, 0 is totally hopelessly messed up. Read the legend at the bottom, all will become clear. U.S. is in the best 11% of the list.

Misreading things like this, and repeating them, is what makes vicious and untrue rumors start until almost everyone accepts the lies as truth. Please be careful.

Bruce, 10 is best under "Amount" but 1 is the best under "Rank"

DEFINITION: A CPI Score relates to perceptions of the degree of corruption as seen by business people and country analysts and ranges between 10 (highly clean) and 0 (highly corrupt). Includes police corruption, business corruption, political corruption, etc. Data for 2005.

128 sounds very ragged to me. It's fine for the car or background music but when I put on my Grado headphones the lossy compression is not really a pleasure to listen to.

This:
"Audio (MP3)
32 kbit/s ï¿½ MW (AM) quality 96 kbit/s ï¿½ FM quality - This is questionable since FM broadcast is transmitted in analog 30hz-15khz. Similarly one cannot compare directly an LP record to CD using kbit/s.
128ï¿½160 kbit/s ï¿½ Standard Bitrate quality; difference can sometimes be obvious (e.g. lack of low frequency quality and high frequency "swashy" effects)[citation needed] 224ï¿½320 kbit/s ï¿½ VBR to highest MP3 quality" from here:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bit_rate

At 225 kbit, it is strange it is so offensive to your ear, it is approaching concert hall quality ... 96 kbit is ~equal to fm radio ... I think what your are hearing is more in your mind than anywhere else.

Palstar R30x are very good.I own one with 2 Collins filters (R30CC).
Audio is above average.Front end is very decent. Big appetite (power)

That is very strange! I always thought modern AC alarm clocks used 60
Hertz as time reference.

Would they go back (using Philadelphia experiment technology) and

What's to reread? We (the US) came in 17th from the best...but over 130 from the bottom. I already read all that you just posted. I'd still like to see the methodology, and an objective rating of how reliable and evenly qualified across the board the sources were.

I stand by my original comments. The top 11% is a lot better than it could have been.
